INTRODUCTION

Section 3802 of the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 (the “IRS Reform Act”)² directs the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Department of the Treasury to undertake separate studies of the present-law disclosure provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, including provisions relating to tax-exempt organizations, and make any legislative and administrative recommendations they deem appropriate. The studies are due by January 22, 2000.

The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation (the “Joint Committee staff”) is publishing its study in three volumes. As set forth in more detail below, Volume I³ contains the Joint Committee staff study relating to general disclosure provisions, Volume II⁴ contains the Joint Committee staff study of disclosure rules relating to tax-exempt organizations, and Volume III,⁵ contains reproductions of public comments received by the Joint Committee staff and reports prepared by the General Accounting Office (the “GAO”) for the Joint Committee staff in connection with the study.

Volume I contains the following: (1) an executive summary and a discussion of the methodology employed by the Joint Committee staff in conducting the study (Part One); (2) a description of the present-law rules relating to general disclosure provisions, including a discussion of sections 6103 and 6110 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (the “Code”), the Freedom of Information Act, and the Privacy Act (Part Two); (3) a discussion of the policies underlying confidentiality and disclosure of tax returns and return information (Part Three); (4)

I. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

A. Introduction

This study was performed pursuant to section 3802 of the IRS Reform Act, which requires the Joint Committee on Taxation (the “Joint Committee”) and the Department of the Treasury to conduct separate studies of the scope and use of provisions regarding taxpayer confidentiality and to report the findings of their studies, together with such recommendations as they deem appropriate, to the Congress not later than January 22, 2000. Under the IRS Reform Act, the studies are to examine specific issues relating to taxpayer confidentiality, including whether the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations described in section 501 of the Code.⁶ To satisfy this legislative mandate, the Joint Committee staff undertook an extensive study and review of the laws relating to disclosure of tax returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations, including relevant sections of the Code and the Freedom of Information Act.

To assist in this study, the Joint Committee staff requested data and certain other information from the Internal Revenue Service (the “IRS”), including data regarding tax-exempt organizations. The Joint Committee staff met with and consulted with representatives of various IRS functions. The Joint Committee staff solicited comments from interested parties. The Joint Committee staff reviewed the written comments submitted in response to its requests for comments and met with various interested parties.

In general, the Joint Committee staff study encompasses all organizations exempt from tax under section 501. However, the Joint Committee staff study does not address disclosure rules relating to churches, because the issues relating to churches are unique. In addition, the Joint Committee staff study does not address disclosure rules relating to tax-exempt pension trusts described in section 401(a) and exempt from tax under section 501(a).

B. Overview of Present Law

In general

There are several statutory regimes relevant to determining whether Federal tax returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations may (or must) be disclosed and, if the information is subject to disclosure, the rules applicable to the disclosure. The primary statutory provisions applicable to disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations are (1) sections 6103, 6104, and 6110 of the Code; and (2) the Freedom of Information Act.⁷ The interrelationship of these provisions is not always clear, and has generated litigation.

⁶ References in this study to section or sec. refer to the Code, unless otherwise indicated.

The Code

The Code contains three basic provisions that control the disclosure of returns and return information: sections 6103, 6104, and 6110. Section 6103 embodies the policy that returns and return information are confidential, and provides that returns and return information may not be disclosed by the IRS, other Federal employees, State employees, and certain others receiving such information except as provided in section 6103. Section 6103 also contains a number of exceptions to this general rule of nondisclosure which authorize disclosure in particular circumstances. Section 6103 imposes recordkeeping and safeguard requirements to protect the confidentiality of returns and return information. Criminal and civil sanctions apply under the Code to the unauthorized disclosure or inspection of returns and return information.

In order to allow the public to scrutinize the activities of tax-exempt organizations, section 6104 grants an exception to the confidentiality rule of section 6103 for certain categories of tax-exempt organization documents and information. Section 6104 requires the release in unredacted form of approved applications for tax-exempt status, certain related documents, and annual information returns filed by tax-exempt organizations. As a general rule, to the extent section 6104 specifically provides for the disclosure of tax-exempt organization information, other disclosure provisions (section 6103, section 6110, or the Freedom of Information Act) do not apply. If tax-exempt organization information does not come within the scope of section 6104, other disclosure provisions will govern whether the information may be disclosed.

With certain exceptions, section 6110 makes the text of any written determination issued by the IRS (and related background file document) available for public inspection. A written determination is any ruling, determination letter, technical advice memorandum, or Chief Counsel advice. Before making written determinations and background file documents available for public inspection, section 6110 requires the IRS to delete specific categories of information. Section 6110 does not apply to any matter to which section 6104 applies. Treasury regulations have interpreted this restriction to apply to some written determinations and other documents relating to tax-exempt organizations that are not subject to disclosure under section 6104. Thus, some written determinations regarding tax-exempt organization issues are not disclosable under either section 6110 or 6104.

⁷ The Privacy Act, which was enacted in 1974 to regulate the collection, use, dissemination, and maintenance of personal information about individuals by Federal agencies, does not apply to persons other than individuals. Therefore, the Privacy Act is inapplicable to tax-exempt organizations.

The Freedom of Information Act

The Freedom of Information Act (the “FOIA”), enacted in 1966, established a statutory right to access government information. While the purpose of section 6103 is to restrict access to returns and return information, the basic purpose of the FOIA is ensure that the public has access to government documents. In general, the FOIA provides that any person has a right of access to Federal agency records, except to the extent that such records (or portions thereof) are protected from disclosure by one of nine exemptions or by one of three special law enforcement record exclusions. This right is enforceable in court.

Returns and return information that cannot be disclosed under section 6103 cannot be disclosed under the FOIA. However, persons seeking access to returns and return information have used the FOIA as an alternative method to attempt to compel disclosure of information arguably protected under section 6103. Cases involving returns and return information and the FOIA have primarily involved the disclosure of IRS guidance and the determination of what qualifies as “return information” under section 6103. FOIA litigation has resulted in the disclosure of IRS documents such as private letter rulings, general counsel memoranda, technical advice memoranda, and field service advice.

C. Policy Issues Relating to Disclosure of Information of Tax-Exempt Organizations

The statutory mandate for this study requires the Joint Committee to determine whether the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. Making this determination involves the balancing of sometimes competing policy objectives. This balancing generally involves, on the one hand, the organization’s right to privacy and concerns about misuses of information and, on the other hand, the legitimate public interest in information regarding tax-exempt organizations. Also involved is the question of the effect of disclosure on voluntary compliance with the tax laws. Other factors may also be relevant, such as whether disclosure would impose additional burdens on tax-exempt organizations and the effect of disclosure on donors and prospective donors. A similar balancing occurs with respect to determining whether to allow disclosure of returns and return information of taxable persons.

Like individual taxpayers, tax-exempt organizations may assert a right to privacy regarding their activities and interactions with the IRS. However, for some time, different disclosure rules have applied to tax-exempt organizations than to individuals and more recent changes in the law have led to increased levels of public disclosure of returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations. Public disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations enables the public to provide oversight of such organizations and the activities in which they are involved. Disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations also allows the public to determine whether the organizations should be supported--through continued tax benefits and contributions of donors--and whether changes in the laws regarding such organizations are needed.

The public has an interest in information about the tax-exempt sector as a whole, as well as in information regarding specific organizations. The public has an interest in knowing whether tax-exempt organizations are complying with the law, how such organizations are carrying out their exempt purposes, and whether the tax benefits provided to such organizations are accomplishing their purposes and should be continued, modified, or eliminated. Members of the public who wish to donate funds to tax-exempt organizations also need to know whether the deduction will be tax deductible.

D. General Principles Relating to Disclosure of Returns and Return Information of Tax-Exempt Organizations

The public has a legitimate interest in access to information of tax-exempt organizations. This public interest derives from the tax benefits accorded under Federal law to such organizations, as well as the nature and purposes of such organizations. The public has an interest in ensuring that tax-exempt organizations are complying with applicable laws and that the funds of such organizations (whether or not solicited from the general public) are being used for the exempt purposes of the organization.

The Joint Committee staff believes that increased disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations will improve the efficiency of the operation of the tax-exempt sector by: (1) increasing public oversight of tax-exempt organizations; (2) increasing compliance with Federal tax and other applicable laws; (3) promoting the fair application and administration of the Federal tax laws; and (4) advancing the policies underlying the Federal tax rules regarding such organizations, including the encouragement of charitable giving. Thus, the Joint Committee staff believes that the general principle governing disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations is that such information should be disclosed unless there are compelling reasons for nondisclosure that clearly outweigh the public interest in disclosure.

In determining whether particular information regarding tax-exempt organizations should not be disclosed, the public interest in disclosure should be balanced against the reasons for nondisclosure. There may be a variety of factors relevant to this determination. For example, in some cases, returns and return information regarding a tax-exempt organization may involve returns and return information of individuals, such as donors. In such a case, the privacy interests of the individual may outweigh the general public interest in the information. In other cases, disclosure of the information may be inconsistent with the objectives of disclosure. For example, in some circumstances, disclosure of information may be viewed as undermining voluntary compliance. In some cases, the administrative burdens on the organization may be unreasonable given the public benefit to be derived from disclosure. The Joint Committee staff believes that any proposed exceptions to the general principle of disclosure should be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether the exception is appropriate.

E. Joint Committee Staff Recommendations

Disclosure of IRS materials

- The Joint Committee staff recommends that all written determinations (and background file documents) involving tax-exempt organizations should be publicly disclosed. In general, the Joint Committee staff recommends that such disclosure should be made without redactions.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS disclose the results of audits of tax-exempt organizations. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that all closing agreements with tax-exempt organizations should be disclosed. In general, the Joint Committee staff recommends that such disclosures should be made without redaction.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that applications for exempt status (and supporting documents) should be disclosed when the application is made. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that any action taken on the application should be disclosed.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that rules similar to the disclosure rules that apply to third party communications under section 6110 should be applied to third party communications relating to written determinations and exemption applications subject to disclosure under section 6104.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the taxpayer identification number of tax-exempt organizations should not be subject to disclosure.

Form 990 and related forms

- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the Form 990 and related forms: (1) should be accepted by the IRS for electronic filing for returns filed after 2002; and (2) should be revised to ensure that the forms provide relevant and comprehensible information to the public as well as the IRS.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the scope of section 6104 should be expanded to require the disclosure of all Forms 990-T and any returns filed by affiliated organizations of tax-exempt organizations.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the scope of section 6104 should be expanded to require the disclosure of the annual return filed by political organizations described in section 527, that section 527 organizations should be required to file an annual return even if they have no taxable income, and that the annual return for such organizations should be revised to include more information concerning the activities of such organizations.

- The Joint Committee staff recommends that tax-exempt organizations should be required to provide both their legal name and the name under which they do business on the Form 990.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS notify taxpayers in instructions and publications that Form 990 is publicly available.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the address of the site on the World Wide Web, if any, of a tax-exempt organization should be included on Form 990 and that the IRS be required to publish such addresses.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the Form 990 report more information concerning the transfer of funds among various tax-exempt organizations so that the public and the IRS can better assess whether contributions to tax-exempt organizations are being used to fund political activities.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that tax-exempt entities (other than churches) that are below the filing threshold for the Form 990-EZ should be required to file annually a brief notification of their status with the IRS.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that private foundations reporting capital gains and losses on Form 990-PF should be permitted to disclose a summary of those capital transactions. A full listing of capital transactions would be required to be filed with the IRS and to be provided to the public upon request.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the present-law tax penalty imposed on tax return preparers should be expanded to apply to any omission or misrepresentation on a Form 990 that either was known or reasonably should have been known to the preparer.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the present-law tax penalty imposed on tax return preparers should be expanded to apply to willful or reckless misrepresentation or disregard of rules and regulations with respect to Form 990.

Disclosure of returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations to nontax State officials or agencies

- The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS should be permitted to disclose to Attorneys General and other nontax State officials or agencies audit and examination information concerning tax-exempt organizations with respect to whom the State officials have jurisdiction and have made a specific referral of such organization to the IRS prior to a final determination with respect to the denial or revocation of tax exemption. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS should be permitted to share audit and examination information concerning tax-exempt organizations with nontax State officials and agencies with jurisdiction over the activities of such organizations and who regularly share information with the IRS when the IRS determines that such disclosure may facilitate the resolution of cases.

Lobbying expenditures

- The Joint Committee staff recommends that public charities (both electing and nonelecting charities) should be required to provide a general description of their lobbying activities on Schedule A to Form 990.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that public charities should be required to disclose expenditures for self-defense lobbying.
- The Joint Committee staff recommends that public charities should be required to disclose expenditures for nonpartisan study, analysis, and research if such study, analysis, or research includes a limited “call to action.”

II. STATUTORY MANDATE AND STUDY METHODOLOGY

A. Statutory Mandate for Study

Section 3802 of the IRS Reform Act requires the Joint Committee and the Department of the Treasury to conduct separate studies of the scope and use of provisions regarding taxpayer confidentiality and to report the findings of their separate studies, together with such recommendations as they deem appropriate, to the Congress not later than January 22, 2000.

Under the IRS Reform Act, the studies are to examine: (1) the present protections for taxpayer privacy; (2) any need for third parties to use tax return information; (3) whether greater levels of voluntary compliance may be achieved by allowing the public to know who is legally required to file tax returns, but does not file tax returns; (4) the interrelationship of the taxpayer confidentiality provisions in the Code with such provisions in other Federal law, including section 552a of Title 5 of the United States Code (commonly referred to as the “Freedom of Information Act”); (5) the impact on taxpayer privacy of the sharing of income tax return information for purposes of enforcement of State and local tax laws other than income tax laws, including the impact on taxpayer privacy intended to be protected at the Federal, State, and local levels under the Taxpayer Browsing Protection Act of 1997;⁸ and (6) whether the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations described in section 501 of the Code.

The House and Senate versions of the IRS Reform Act had similar provisions relating to the study.⁹ The legislative history to both the House bill and the Senate amendment provide that “a study of the confidentiality provisions will be useful in assisting the Committee in determining whether improvements can be made to these provisions.”

Neither the House nor Senate bill contained the requirement that the studies address disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. This provision was added in conference. There is no legislative history specific to this provision.

The Report of the National Commission on Restructuring the IRS, which formed the basis for many provisions in the IRS Reform Act, contains the following statement regarding access to tax return information:

⁹ The House bill required the Joint Committee to conduct a study relating to items (1)-(3) described in the text. H.R. Rep. No. 105-364 (1998). The Senate amendment also required the Treasury Department to conduct a study, and added items (4) and (5). The Senate amendment provided that the studies should examine whether return information should be disclosed to a State unless the State has first notified personally in advance each person with respect to whom information has been requested. This provision was not adopted in conference.

The Commission heard concerns regarding the scope and use of the provisions regarding taxpayer confidentiality. In light of the complexity of the issue and the need to balance a host of conflicting interests, including taxpayer privacy, the need for third parties to use tax return information, and the ability to achieve greater levels of voluntary compliance by allowing the public to know who does not file tax returns, Congress should study these rules.¹⁰

B. Joint Committee Staff Methodology for Study

To satisfy its legislative mandate, the Joint Committee staff undertook an extensive study and review of the laws relating to disclosure of returns and return information, including Code sections 6103, 6104, 6110, and related sections, the Freedom of Information Act, and the Taxpayer Browsing Protection Act of 1997.

To assist in its study, the Joint Committee staff requested that the GAO review: (1) which Federal, State, and local agencies receive returns and return information from the IRS; (2) the type of information they receive; (3) how those agencies use returns and return information; (4) what policies and procedures the agencies are required to follow to safeguard returns and return information; (5) how frequently IRS monitors agencies' adherence to the safeguarding requirements; and (6) the results of the IRS most recent monitoring efforts.

The Joint Committee staff also requested that the GAO determine: (1) which State and local governments are operating programs to publicly disclose the names of taxpayers that do not file tax returns or are delinquent in paying the income taxes they owe; (2) the differences, if any, among these programs; and (3) the State and local revenue office officials' views on whether their disclosure programs are improving compliance.

The GAO reviewed IRS data, conducted surveys of Federal and selected State and local agencies receiving taxpayer data, and interviewed State and local revenue office officials. The GAO included the results of its review in two reports prepared for the Joint Committee staff and provided¹¹ the survey responses to the Joint Committee staff.

¹⁰ Report of the National Commission on Restructuring the Internal Revenue Service, A Vision for a New IRS, 49 (June 25, 1997). The Commission also recommended that media requests to the IRS under the FOIA be given priority for processing and appeals. The Commission recommended that this expedited process mirror the process established by the Department of Justice, which, according to the Commission, provides expedited processing for requests that promote public accountability, particularly when the information sought involves possible questions about the government's integrity which affect public confidence. Id.

¹¹ These reports may be found in Volume III of this study.

At the request of the Joint Committee staff, the IRS Office of Chief Counsel provided summaries of unauthorized disclosure cases in which the Government settled or lost the case for an amount exceeding $25,000. At the request of the Joint Committee staff, the Office of the Treasury Inspector General For Tax Administration (“TIGTA”) provided statistics regarding alleged violations of the Taxpayer Browsing Protection Act of 1997.

The Joint Committee staff met with and orally consulted representatives of various IRS functions and TIGTA regarding the operation of sections 6103, 6104, and 6110. Representatives of the private sector and other governmental agencies (both Federal and State) provided the Joint Committee staff with oral comments.

The Joint Committee staff requested data and certain other information from the IRS, including data regarding tax-exempt organizations, information on returns and return information safeguard reviews, and information regarding response time to FOIA requests.

On August 17, 1999, the Joint Committee staff issued a press release asking interested parties to submit written comments and recommendations on issues relevant to the confidentiality of tax returns and return information. Specifically, the Joint Committee staff invited comments with respect to the following matters:

- (1) the adequacy of present-law protections governing taxpayer privacy;
- (2) the need, if any, for third parties, including those presently authorized under the Code, to use tax return information;
- (3) whether greater levels of voluntary compliance can be achieved by allowing the public to know who is legally required to file tax returns but does not do so;
- (4) the interrelationship of the taxpayer confidentiality provisions in the Internal Revenue Code with the Freedom of Information Act, the Privacy Act, and section 6110 of the Code;
- (5) the impact on taxpayer privacy of sharing returns and return information for the purposes of enforcing State and local tax laws (other than income tax laws), including the impact on taxpayer privacy intended to be protected at the Federal, State, and local levels under the Taxpayer Browsing Protection Act of 1997; and
- (6) the extent to which the current disclosure provisions provide taxpayers, exempt organizations, and tax practitioners with sufficient guidance.

The Joint Committee staff also invited comments on disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations described in section 501 of the Code. Specifically, the Joint Committee staff invited comments with respect to the following matters:

- (1) whether the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of information with respect to organizations exempt from tax under section 501, and
- (2) the extent to which the present-law disclosure provisions relating to such organizations assure accountability of such organizations to the public, the Internal Revenue Service, and other agencies that provide oversight.

Interested parties were requested to submit comments in writing to the Joint Committee on Taxation by October 1, 1999. The Joint Committee staff received written submissions from more than 50 commentators and received more than 10 written submissions relating specifically to tax-exempt organizations.¹² In addition, Joint Committee staff met with representatives of certain of the taxpayer groups and organizations with respect to their written comments.

C. Scope of the Study

In conducting its study, the Joint Committee staff analyzed the present-law disclosure rules regarding tax-exempt organizations to determine whether there are specific issues under present law, such as improvements in the quality of information reported on Form 990, that should be addressed. In addition, the Joint Committee staff undertook a broader analysis of the policies underlying the disclosure rules to determine whether, in general, returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations should be subject to increased disclosure and whether different principles regarding disclosure should apply to such organizations than to other taxpayers.

The Joint Committee staff also addressed the issue of whether the study should relate to all, or only certain types of, tax-exempt organizations. The statutory mandate requires the Joint Committee to study organizations exempt from tax under section 501. There are certain organizations that are exempt from tax under other sections of the Code, such as certain farmer's cooperatives described in section 521. Because the statutory mandate does not address organizations exempt from tax under sections of the Code other than section 501(c), the Joint Committee staff generally did not include such organizations in its study. However, such organizations were included in the study to the extent there is an interrelationship with such organizations and organizations exempt from tax under section 501.

In general, the Joint Committee staff study encompasses all organizations exempt from tax under section 501. There are two exceptions to this rule in the case of organizations that present unique issues.

¹² The comments relating to the general disclosure provisions are summarized in Appendix D of Volume I. The comments relating to tax-exempt organizations are summarized in Appendix C of this Volume. All comments are reproduced in full in Volume III of this study.

First, the Joint Committee staff study does not address disclosure rules relating to churches. Churches have historically been treated differently than other types of tax-exempt organizations. Under present law, churches generally have not been required to make any disclosures to the IRS or to the public in general.¹³ Furthermore, requiring disclosure by churches may raise Constitutional issues regarding the separation of church and state that do not arise with respect to other types of tax-exempt organizations. Because the issues relating to churches are unique, the Joint Committee staff believes these issues would need to be separately studied before any recommendations could be made.

Second, the Joint Committee staff study does not address disclosure rules relating to tax-exempt pension trusts described in section 401(a) and exempt from tax under section 501(a). Such trusts are subject to a comprehensive statutory regime not applicable to tax-exempt organizations generally, including special filing and disclosure requirements. As is the case with churches, these issues would need to be separately studied before any recommendations could be made.

¹³ Churches are treated differently than other tax-exempt organizations in other areas, as well. For example, special audit procedures apply to churches under section 7611. The legislative history to these rules notes the “special problems, including problems of separation of church and state and the special relationship of a church to its members that arise when the Internal Revenue Service (or any governmental agency) examines the records of a church.” S. Rep. No. 98-169, Vol. I, at 873 (1984).

III. PRESENT LAW AND BACKGROUND RELATING TO TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

A. Summary of Present-Law Rules for Tax-Exempt Organizations

1. Overview of types of tax-exempt organizations

Present-law section 501(c) describes twenty-seven different categories of nonprofit organizations that generally are exempt from Federal income tax under section 501(a).¹⁴ The most commonly known types of tax-exempt organizations are charitable, educational, religious, and other organizations described in section 501(c)(3), which generally are referred to as “charitable organizations.” In addition to section 501(c)(3) organizations, certain noncharitable organizations qualify for exemption from Federal income taxation. Like section 501(c)(3) organizations, these other organizations must satisfy specific requirements related to certain defined exempt purposes in order to qualify for tax exemption. The noncharitable organizations described in section 501(c) are:

- instrumentalities of the United States (section 501(c)(1));
- title and real property holding companies (section 501(c)(2));
- social welfare organizations (section 501(c)(4));
- labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations (section 501(c)(5));
- trade associations (section 501(c)(6));
- social clubs (section 501(c)(7));
- fraternal benefit societies (section 501(c)(8));
- voluntary employees’ beneficiary associations (section 501(c)(9));
- domestic fraternal organizations (section 501(c)(10));
- teachers’ retirement fund associations (section 501(c)(11));
- benevolent life insurance associations, mutual ditch or irrigation companies, mutual or cooperative telephone companies, or like organizations (section 501(c)(12));
- cemetery companies (section 501(c)(13));
- nonprofit credit unions (section 501(c)(14));
- certain insurance companies or associations (section 501(c)(15));
- crop-financing corporations (section 501(c)(16));
- supplemental unemployment compensation trusts (section 501(c)(17));
- employee-funded pension trusts (section 501(c)(18));
- U.S. armed forces posts or organizations (section 501(c)(19));

¹⁴ Qualified pension trusts described in section 401(a) are also exempt from tax under section 501(a). Other Code sections provide limited tax-exempt status for other types of organizations, such as certain cooperatives (sec. 521) and political organizations (sec. 527). As described in Part II., above, such organizations generally are not within the scope of this study.

- qualified group legal services plans (section 501(c)(20));¹⁵
- black lung trusts (section 501(c)(21));
- multiemployer plan trusts (section 501(c)(22));
- armed forces insurance associations (section 501(c)(23));
- trusts described in ERISA¹⁶ section 4049 (section 501(c)(24));
- title-holding corporations or trusts (section 501(c)(25));
- State-sponsored high-risk health insurance pools (section 501(c)(26)); and
- State-sponsored workers' compensation organizations (section 501(c)(27)).

To qualify as a tax-exempt organization described in section 501(c)(3), an organization must be organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, to foster international amateur sports competition, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. No part of the net earnings of such an organization may inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.¹⁷ In addition, no substantial part of the activities of a section 501(c)(3) organization may consist of carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation, and such an organization may not participate in, or intervene in, any political campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for public office.

A section 501(c)(3) organization must operate primarily in pursuance of one or more tax exempt purposes constituting the basis of its tax exemption.¹⁸ Failure to do so may result in loss of tax exemption or imposition of excise taxes depending on the type and severity of the violation. In order to qualify for recognition of tax exemption as an organization described in section 501(c)(3) that operates primarily for an exempt purpose, the organization must satisfy the following operational requirements: (1) the organization may not be operated primarily to conduct an unrelated trade or business;¹⁹ (2) the net earnings of the organization may not inure to ¹⁵ The tax exemption for qualified group legal services plans expired for taxable years beginning after June 30, 1992. Sec. 120(c).

¹⁶ "ERISA" refers to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended.

¹⁷ This "private inurement" rule also applies to certain other tax-exempt entities (i.e., sec. 501(c)(4) social welfare organizations and sec. 501(c)(6) trade associations).

¹⁸ Treas. reg. sec. 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(1).

¹⁹ Treas. reg. sec. 1.501(c)-1(e)(1). Conducting a certain level of unrelated trade or business activity will not jeopardize tax-exempt status; however, too much of such activity will result in loss of tax-exempt status. There are no clear arithmetic standards for determining how much unrelated activity an organization may conduct without jeopardizing its tax-exempt status. Rather, the determination is made based on a series of facts and circumstances determinations.

the benefit of any person in a position to influence the activities of the organization;²⁰ (3) the organization must operate to provide a public benefit, not a private benefit;²¹ (4) the organization may not engage in substantial legislative lobbying;²² and (5) the organization may not participate or intervene in any political campaign.²³

In general, section 501(c)(3) organizations are characterized as either private foundations or public charities. Private foundations are organizations that primarily are supported by a small number of contributors and that do not receive substantial support from the public. All other section 501(c)(3) organizations are characterized as public charities. Private foundations are subject to restrictions not applicable to public charities, including: (1) prohibitions on certain transactions with “disqualified persons”;²⁴ (2) minimum annual payout requirements;²⁵ (3)

²¹ Treas. reg. sec. 1.501(c)-1(d)(1)(ii). The regulations provide that “it is necessary for an organization to establish that it is not organized or operated for the benefit of private interests such as designated individuals, the creator or his family, shareholders of the organization, or persons controlled, directly or indirectly, by such private interests.” Id. Private benefit is permissible if it constitutes merely an “insubstantial part” of an organization’s total activities in light of all the facts and circumstances of a particular case. Excessive private benefit will result in loss of an organization’s tax-exempt status.

²³ The political activities prohibition for section 501(c)(3) organizations is absolute. Thus, it is not necessary for such activities to constitute a substantial part of an organization’s activities before the organization’s tax exemption will be in jeopardy. The Code provides three penalties that may be applied either as alternatives to revocation of tax exemption or in addition to loss of tax-exempt status: an excise tax (sec. 4955), termination assessment of all taxes due (sec. 6852(a)(1)), and an injunction against further political expenditures (sec. 7409).

limitations on the ownership of business interests;²⁶ (4) restrictions on investments;²⁷ and (5) prohibitions on the expenditure of funds for certain purposes, including lobbying, political activities,²⁸ grants to individuals (without prior IRS approval), grants to organizations other than public charities unless special procedures are followed, and expenditures for noncharitable purposes.²⁹ Private foundations also are subject to a tax on their net investment income.³⁰

2. Tax-exempt organization data

As of October 31, 1999, there were over 1.3 million organizations exempt from taxation under section 501(a) and described in section 501(c) that had received recognition of their tax-exempt status from the IRS.³¹ Somewhat more than half of those organizations, or 776,557, are charitable, educational, religious, and other organizations described in section 501(c)(3).³² Of the organizations described in section 501(c)(3) as of October 31, 1999, approximately 90 percent are public charities.³³

²⁶ A private foundation generally may not hold more than 20 percent ownership in a business (sec. 4943).

³⁰ Sec. 4940.

³¹ The source of this data is the IRS Exempt Organizations/Business Master File, Table 3. The data regarding tax-exempt organizations provided in this section and elsewhere in this volume of the study were assembled by the IRS for a variety of purposes. Different data were subject to different levels of quality review by the IRS; consequently, the accuracy of the numbers provided may vary. Unless otherwise noted, the data provided includes only those organizations that have received recognition of their tax-exempt status from the IRS. Thus, the data does not include organizations, such as churches, that are not required to seek recognition of tax-exempt status from the IRS.

3. Federal tax rules applicable to tax-exempt organizations³⁶

In general

The Federal income tax benefits available to tax-exempt organizations depend, in part, on the nature of the organization. In general, tax-exempt organizations are not subject to Federal income tax on dues and contributions they receive from their members, or on other income from activities that are substantially related to the purpose of their tax exemption. Tax-exempt organizations generally are not subject to Federal income tax on their investment income, although this rule does not apply to certain organizations (e.g., social clubs described in section 501(c)(7) and political organizations described in section 527), which must pay Federal income tax on their investment income. Contributions to organizations described in section 501(c)(3) generally are tax deductible. Tax-exempt organizations described in section 501(c)(3) also may utilize tax-exempt financing.

³⁶ In addition to qualifying for favorable tax treatment under Federal law, section 501(c)(3) organizations and certain other organizations may qualify for exemption under State and local taxes. Section 501(c)(3) organizations qualify for preferential postal rates and, in certain cases, are exempt from some Federal excise taxes (e.g., taxes on highway fuels used by section 501(c)(3) school buses).

Unrelated business income tax

Tax-exempt organizations are subject to the unrelated business income tax ("UBIT") on income derived from a trade or business regularly carried on by the organization that is not substantially related to the performance of the organization's tax-exempt functions.³⁷ The UBIT applies to all organizations that are tax exempt under section 501(a) (other than certain U.S. instrumentalities created and made tax exempt by a specific Act of Congress).³⁸ Certain income, however, is exempt specifically from the UBIT, such as dividends, interest, royalties, and certain rents, unless derived from debt-financed property or from certain 50-percent controlled subsidiaries.³⁹ Other exemptions from the UBIT are provided for activities in which substantially all the work is performed by volunteers, for income from the sale of donated goods, and for certain activities carried on for the convenience of members, students, patients, officers, or employees of a charitable organization.⁴⁰ In addition, special UBIT provisions exempt from tax certain activities of trade shows and State fairs, income from bingo games, and income from the distribution of certain low-cost items incidental to the solicitation of charitable contributions.⁴¹

Deductibility of contributions

Contributions to organizations described in section 501(c)(3) generally are deductible as an itemized deduction from Federal income taxes.⁴² Such contributions are also generally

³⁷ Secs. 511-514. Tax-exempt organizations are taxed on their unrelated business taxable income at the regular corporate tax rates (sec. 511(a)). Charitable and other generally tax-exempt trusts are subject to tax on their unrelated business taxable income under the rates generally applicable to taxable trusts (sec. 511(b)).

³⁸ Sec. 511(a)(2).

³⁹ Sec. 512(b). In the case of social clubs (sec. 501(c)(7)) and voluntary employees' beneficiary associations (sec. 501(c)(9)), the UBIT applies to all income of the organization other than certain "exempt function income," such as membership dues and fees. A principal effect of this rule is to subject the investment income of the social club or voluntary employees' beneficiary association to the UBIT, unless such investment income is set aside to be used for an exempt purpose (sec. 512(a)(3)).

⁴⁰ Sec. 513(a).

⁴¹ Secs. 513(d), (f), and (h).

deductible for estate and gift tax purposes.⁴³ However, public charities enjoy certain advantages over private foundations regarding the deductibility of contributions.⁴⁴ For example, contributions of appreciated capital gain property to a private foundation generally are deductible only to the extent of the donor's cost basis. In contrast, contributions to public charities generally are deductible in an amount equal to the property's fair market value, except for gifts of inventory and other ordinary income property, short-term capital gain property, and tangible personal property, the use of which is unrelated to the donee organizations' exempt purpose.⁴⁵

Total deductible contributions to public charities and private foundations by individuals of cash and appreciated property may not exceed 50 percent of the donor's "contribution base," which is typically the donor's adjusted gross income for a taxable year. To the extent that a taxpayer has not exceeded this 50-percent limitation, contributions of cash to private foundations generally may be deducted up to 30 percent of the donor's contribution base. Deductible gifts of appreciated property (e.g., an art collection that has increased in value) to public charities are limited to 30 percent of the donor's contribution base. Donations of appreciated property to private foundations cannot exceed 20 percent of the donor's contribution base.

Tax-exempt financing

Section 501(c)(3) organizations have access to tax-exempt financing through State or local governments. Interest on State or local government bonds is tax exempt when the proceeds are used to finance activities of those governmental units or the bonds are repaid with governmental funds (e.g., taxes). State and local governments also may act as conduits to provide tax-exempt financing for limited activities conducted and paid for by nongovernmental entities or individuals. One permitted type of such private activity conduit financing is for the exempt activities of section 501(c)(3) organizations. This exception does not include financing for unrelated business activities of such organizations.

⁴³ Secs. 2055 and 2522.

⁴⁵ A special rule in section 170(e)(5) provides that taxpayers are allowed a deduction equal to the fair market value of certain contributions of appreciated, publicly-traded stock contributed to a private foundation.

4. Recognition of tax-exempt status

In general

Before enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 (the “1969 Act”), organizations seeking recognition of tax exemption under section 501(a) generally were not required to obtain IRS approval of their tax-exempt status. As part of the 1969 Act, Congress required that section 501(c)(3) organizations (with certain exceptions) notify the IRS of their tax-exempt status by filing an application for recognition of tax-exempt status. The IRS recognizes the tax-exempt status of an organization by issuing a determination letter or ruling in response to the organization’s notification that it is seeking recognition of exempt status.⁴⁶ Certain section 501(c)(3) organizations are not required to seek recognition of tax-exempt status but may elect to do so. These organizations include churches, certain church-related organizations, organizations (other than private foundations) the gross receipts of which in each taxable year are normally not more than $5,000, subordinate organizations (other than private foundations) to another tax-exempt organization that are covered by a group exemption letter, and for certain purposes only, section 4947(a)(1) trusts, which were organized before October 9, 1969.⁴⁷

Section 501(c)(9) voluntary employees’ beneficiary associations and section 501(c)(17) employee supplemental unemployment compensation benefit trusts also must apply to the IRS for recognition of tax-exempt status.⁴⁸

Other organizations described in section 501(c) are not subject to the Code’s mandatory notice requirements and, therefore, are not required to notify the IRS that they are seeking recognition of their tax-exempt status. Such organizations may voluntarily file exemption applications in order to establish their qualifications for tax exemption with the IRS.⁴⁹

⁴⁷ Sec. 508(c); Treas. reg. sec. 1.508-1(a)(3). As of September 31, 1999, there were 105,891 churches that had voluntarily filed an exemption application and had been granted tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3). The IRS estimates that there are several hundred thousand churches that have not requested determination letters from the IRS. IRS Exempt Organizations/Business Master File, Table 3.

Application process

Organizations described in section 501(c)(3) file Form 1023 (Application for Recognition of Exemption Under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code) with the IRS in order to apply for recognition of tax-exempt status.⁵⁰ A favorable determination by the IRS will be retroactive to the date that the section 501(c)(3) organization was created if it files a completed Form 1023 within 15 months from the end of the month it was formed.⁵¹ If the organization files no Form 1023 or files a late notice, it will not be treated as tax exempt under section 501(c)(3) for any period prior to the filing of an application for recognition of tax exemption.⁵² Contributions to section 501(c)(3) organizations that are subject to the requirement that they must notify the IRS of their tax-exempt status are not deductible from income, gift, or estate tax until the organization receives a determination letter from the IRS.⁵³

⁵⁰ A copy of this form is included in Appendix B.

⁵¹ Pursuant to Treas. Reg. sec. 301.9100-2(a)(2)(iv), organizations are allowed an automatic 12-month extension as long as the application for recognition of tax exemption is filed within the extended, i.e., 27-month period. The IRS also may grant an extension beyond the 27-month period if the organization is able to establish that it acted reasonably and in good faith and that granting relief will not prejudice the interests of the government. Treas. Reg. secs. 301.9100-1 and 301.9100-3.

⁵² Treas. reg. sec. 1.508-1(a)(1).

⁵³ Sec. 508(d)(2)(B).

Organizations described in paragraphs of section 501(c) other than section 501(c)(3) generally file Form 1024 (Application for Recognition of Exemption Under Section 501(a)).⁵⁴ Because section 501(c) organizations other than those described in sections 501(c)(3), 501(c)(9), and 501(c)(17) are not required to obtain recognition from the IRS of their tax-exempt status, there is no specific time requirement for such organizations to file Form 1024, and such organizations are presumed to be tax-exempt from the date of their formation.

Information required on Forms 1023 and 1024 includes: (1) information about previously filed Federal income tax and exempt organization returns; (2) a statement of receipts and expenditures for the current year and the three preceding years (or for the number of years of the organization's existence, if less than four years); (3) a balance sheet for the current year; (4) a statement of actual and proposed activities; (5) a description of anticipated receipts and contemplated expenditures; (6) a copy of the articles of incorporation, trust document, or other organizational or enabling document; and (7) organization bylaws (if any).

A determination letter issued by the IRS will state that the application for recognition of tax exemption and supporting documents establish that the organization submitting the application meets the requirements of the particular exemption category that it claimed. An organization that has received a favorable tax-exemption determination from the IRS generally may continue to rely on the determination as long as "there are no substantial changes in the organization's character, purposes or methods of operation."⁵⁵

According to the IRS, approximately 70-75 percent of determination letter applications are approved annually. Fewer than one percent of the determination letter applications received are denied tax-exempt status each year. On average, the IRS processes determination letter applications that are merit screened in approximately 37 days, applications that are assigned for Key District Office review in approximately 90 days, and applications that are forwarded to the IRS National Office in 190 days.

Screening for merit closures is a technical screening of determination letter requests by inspecting the applications for the purpose of identifying and quickly approving applications from those types of organizations that have historically high levels of compliance with the Code and regulations. During fiscal year 1995, 19 percent of all applications were closed after merit screening; in fiscal year 1996, 22 percent were so closed.

Pursuant to an IRS Field Directive dated January 21, 1999, if a determination letter application has been pending for 270 days or more, the taxpayer has the right to request a conference with the head of the appropriate division (i.e., the District Director, if the case is in the ⁵⁵ Treas. reg. sec. 1.501(a)-1(a)(2).

District Office, or the Assistant Commissioner, if the case is in the IRS National Office) to discuss the status of the application.

An organization can request that the IRS expedite a determination letter application. Under the Internal Revenue Manual, requests for expedited treatment must be made in writing and contain a compelling reason why a case should be worked ahead of its normal date order. In general, expedited treatment is granted in the following circumstances: (1) when a grant to the applicant is pending and the failure to secure the grant may have an adverse impact on the organization's ability to continue operations; (2) when the purpose of the newly created organization is to provide disaster relief to victims of emergencies such as flood and hurricane; (3) when there have been undue delays in issuing a determination letter caused by problems within the IRS; and (4) in any other situation where the Division Chief or his or her delegate feels expedited service is warranted.

A ruling or determination letter may be revoked or modified by (1) notice from the IRS to the organization to which the ruling or determination letter was originally issued;⁵⁶ (2) enactment of legislation or ratification of a tax treaty; (3) a decision of the United States Supreme Court; (4) issuance of temporary or final Regulations by the Treasury Department; or (5) issuance of a revenue ruling, a revenue procedure, or other statement in the Internal Revenue Bulletin.⁵⁷ An organization's tax exemption will not be terminated if it becomes inactive for a time but does not cease being a legal entity under the laws of the State in which it is organized.⁵⁸

5. Annual filing requirements for tax-exempt organizations

Tax-exempt organizations generally are required to file an annual information return with the IRS. An organization that has not received a determination of its tax-exempt status, but that claims tax-exempt status under section 501(a), is subject to the same annual reporting requirements and exceptions as organizations that have received a tax-exemption determination.

Most tax-exempt organizations are required to file annually Form 990 (Return of Organization Exempt From Income Tax).⁶¹ Section 501(c)(3) organizations that are classified as public charities must file Form 990 and an additional form, Schedule A, which requests information specific to section 501(c)(3) organizations. An organization that is required to file Form 990, but that has gross receipts of less than $100,000 during its taxable year, and total assets of less than $250,000 at the end of its taxable year, may file Form 990-EZ instead of Form 990.⁶² Private foundations are required to file Form 990-PF rather than Form 990.⁶³

On the applicable annual information return, organizations are required to report their gross income, information on their finances, functional expenses, compensation, activities, and other information required by the IRS in order to review the organization's activities and operations during the previous taxable year and to review whether the organization continues to meet the statutory requirements for exemption. Specific examples of the information required by Form 990 include the following:

- (1) Statement of program accomplishments (Part III).

⁶¹ A copy of this form is included in Appendix B. Certain organizations file special forms. For example, black lung trusts described in section 501(c)(21) file form 990-BL.

⁶² A copy of this form is included in Appendix B.

⁶³ Form 990-PF requires, among other things: information about the foundation's gross income for the year; information about expenses attributable to such income; information about disbursements for exempt purposes; information about total contributions and gifts received, and the names of all substantial contributors; names, addresses, and compensation of officers and directors; an itemized statement of securities and other assets held at the close of the year; an itemized statement of all grants made or approved; and information about whether the organization has complied with the restrictions applicable to private foundations (secs. 4941-4945).

- (2) Description of the relationship of the organization's activities to the accomplishment of the organization's exempt purposes (Part VIII).
- (3) Payments to individuals including the following:
 - (a) Compensation to officers and directors: Part V requires disclosure of all compensation paid to officers, directors, trustees, and key employees. If any officer, director, trustee, or key employee received aggregate compensation of more than $100,000 from the organization and any related organizations, of which more than $10,000 was provided by a related organization, a schedule must be attached listing the names of each such individual receiving such compensation, the name of each related organization that provided the compensation and the amount each provided. Compensation for these purposes includes not only salary, but also fees, bonuses and severance payments, all forms of deferred compensation, as well as both taxable and non-taxable fringe benefits.
 - (b) Highly compensated employees: Part I of Schedule A requires disclosure of compensation information on the five most highly paid employees, other than individuals covered above, who receive compensation in excess of $50,000.
 - (c) Highly compensated contractors: Part II of Schedule A requires disclosure of compensation information on the five most highly paid independent contractors (whether individuals or firms) who receive compensation in excess of $50,000 for professional services.
 - (d) Insider transactions: Schedule A, Part III, Question 2 requires information relating to whether the organization, either directly or indirectly, engaged in any of the following acts with any of its trustees, directors, officers, creators, key employees, or members of their families, or with any taxable organization with which any such person is affiliated as an officer, director, trustee, majority owner or principal beneficiary: (i) sale, exchange or leasing of property; (ii) lending of money or other extension of credit; (iii) furnishing of goods, services or facilities; (iv) payment of compensation for payment or reimbursement of expenses of more than $1,000; or (v) transfer of any part of its income or assets.
 - (e) Grants and allocations: Line 22 of Form 990 requires, in addition to other information, a schedule listing the name of each donee that received a grant or award and, in the case of grants to individuals, the relationship of the donee to an officer, director, trustee, or key employee.
 - (f) Loans to officers, directors, trustees, and key employees: Line 50 of Form 990 requires a schedule listing each loan or advance made to officers, directors, trustees, or key employees, including the amount of the loan, the balance due, the repayment terms, the interest rate, the security provided by the borrower and the purpose of the loan.

- (4) Disclosure of certain activities including the following:
- (a) Expenses of conferences and conventions: Lines 39 and 40 of Form 990 require the disclosure of total expenses incurred by the organization for travel, meals and lodging, and in conducting meetings related to its activities.
 - (b) Political expenditures: Line 81a of Form 990 requires the disclosure of the amount of expenditures, direct or indirect, intended to influence the selection, election, or appointment of anyone to political office.
 - (c) Public inspection: Line 83a of Form 990 requires the disclosure of whether the organization complied with the public inspection requirements for returns and exemption applications.
 - (d) Lobbying activities: Schedule A, Parts VI-A and VI-B requires public charities to quantify their attempts to influence national, state, or local legislation.

Any organization that is subject to UBIT and that has $1,000 or more of gross unrelated business taxable income must file Form 990-T. An organization described in section 501(c) must file Form 1120-POL for any year in which it has net investment income and expends any amount to influence the selection, nomination, election or appointment of any individual to office, unless either the amount of such expenditures or the organization's net investment income does not exceed $100 for the taxable year. Public charities that make the section 501(h) lobbying election and that incur tax for excess lobbying expenditures must also file Form 4720.⁶⁴ Tax-exempt organizations generally must file reports and returns applicable to taxable entities with respect to Social Security taxes and (with the exception of section 501(c)(3) organizations) Federal unemployment taxes.

⁶⁴ The lobbying rules applicable to public charities and the section 501(h) lobbying election are discussed in Part VI.E., below.

Table 4, below, provides the number of Forms 990, Forms 990-EZ, Forms 990-PF, Forms 4720, and Forms 1120-POL filed in calendar years 1996, 1997, 1998.

The requirement of filing an annual information return does not apply to several categories of tax-exempt organizations. Organizations excepted from the filing requirement include: churches, their integrated auxiliaries, and conventions or associations of churches; certain organizations (other than private foundations), the gross receipts of which in each taxable year are normally not more than $25,000; the exclusively religious activities of any religious order; section 501(c)(1) instrumentalities of the United States; section 501(c)(24) trusts described in ERISA section 4049; an interchurch organization of local units of a church; certain mission societies; and certain church-affiliated elementary and high schools.⁶⁶

The IRS conducts examinations annually of selected returns filed by tax-exempt organizations. Table 5, below, provides the number of tax-exempt organization return examinations completed in fiscal years 1997-1999.

⁶⁵ The IRS speculates that the increase in Forms 990 recorded as filed in 1997 may have resulted from the centralization of Form 990 processing at the IRS Service Center in Ogden, Ohio.

B. Present-Law Disclosure Rules for Tax-Exempt Organizations

1. Introduction

Three Code sections (sections 6103, 6104, and 6110) and the FOIA govern the disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations.⁶⁷ Section 6103 provides a general rule that tax returns and return information generally are not subject to public disclosure.⁶⁸ Given the broad definitions of returns and return information, much tax-exempt organization information comes within the ambit of section 6103. However, in order to allow the public to scrutinize the activities of tax-exempt organizations, section 6104 grants an exception to the confidentiality rule of section 6103 for certain categories of tax-exempt organization documents and information. As discussed in greater detail below, section 6104 permits the release in unredacted form of approved applications for tax-exempt status, certain related documents, and annual information returns filed by tax-exempt organizations. As a general rule, to the extent section 6104 specifically provides for the disclosure of tax-exempt organization information, other disclosure provisions (sections 6103, 6110, or the FOIA) do not apply.⁶⁹ If tax-exempt organization information does not come within the scope of section 6104, other disclosure provisions will govern whether the information may be disclosed.

Section 6110 provides that written determinations by the IRS and related background file documents generally are open to public inspection in redacted form. Section 6110 does not apply to any matter to which section 6104 applies.⁷⁰ As discussed more fully below, IRS regulations have interpreted this restriction to apply to some written determinations and other documents relating to tax-exempt organizations that are not subject to disclosure under section 6104. Thus, some written determinations regarding tax-exempt organization issues are not disclosable under either section 6110 or 6104.

The FOIA provides a rule of general disclosure of information by government agencies upon request. Generally, the FOIA provides that any person has a right of access to Federal agency records, except to the extent that such records (or portions thereof) are protected from disclosure by one of nine exemptions or by one of three special law enforcement record exclusions. Most courts have taken the position that section 6103 qualifies as one of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA, thus, information that contains returns or return information within the meaning of section 6103 typically cannot be disclosed pursuant to a FOIA request.⁷¹ There has been substantial litigation, however, over whether documents not specifically covered by section 6104 may be obtained either under section 6110 or under the FOIA.⁷²

⁷¹ The interaction of section 6103 and the FOIA is discussed in greater detail in Part Two, VI. of Volume I of this study.

⁷² The interaction of section 6110 and the FOIA and litigation over the parameters of both statutes is discussed in greater detail in Part Two of Volume I of this study.

2. Section 6104: disclosure of applications for recognition of tax exemption and annual information returns

Disclosure to the public

Under present law, section 501(c) organizations are required to make a copy of their application for recognition of tax-exempt status⁷³ (and certain related documents) and their annual information return (Form 990 or Form 990-PF) available for inspection by any individual during regular business hours at the organization's principal office or any regional or district office that has three or more employees.⁷⁴ Organizations are not required to disclose an application for tax exemption filed by the organization unless the IRS responded favorably to the application.⁷⁵ The required disclosure does not include Form 990-T, Exempt Organization Business Income Tax Return, or Form 1120-POL, U.S. Income Tax Return for Certain Political Organizations. In addition, public charities are not required to disclose the names of donors to the organization. Annual information returns must be made available for a three-year period beginning with the due date for the return (including any extension of time for filing).⁷⁶

All tax-exempt organizations (other than private foundations) are required to comply with requests made in person or in writing by individuals who seek a copy of the organization's Form 990 for any of the organization's three most recent taxable years.⁷⁷ Upon such a request, the organization is required to supply copies without charge other than a reasonable fee for reproduction and mailing costs. If the request for copies is made in person, then the organization must provide such copies immediately. If the request for copies is made in writing, then copies must be provided within 30 days. Tax-exempt organizations (other than private foundations) also must comply in the same manner with requests made in person or in writing by individuals who ⁷³ A court of appeals has held that the section 6104 disclosure requirements do not apply to documents relating to whether a tax-exempt organization is also a private foundation. Breuhaus v. Internal Revenue Service, 609 F.2d 80, 82 (2d Cir. 1979). Another court has held that disclosure of information relating to an investigation of a violation of section 501(c)(3) by an organization does not fall within the plain meaning of section 6104(a)(1) and, thus, is not subject to disclosure under section 6104. Belisle v. Internal Revenue Service, 462 F. Supp. 460 (W.D. Okla. 1978).

seek a copy of the organization's application for recognition of tax-exempt status and certain related documents. However, an organization may be relieved of its obligation to provide copies if (1) the organization has made the requested documents widely available by posting them on the Internet, or (2) the Secretary of the Treasury has determined, upon application by the organization, that the request is part of a harassment campaign and that compliance with such request is not in the public interest.⁷⁸

Upon written request to the IRS, members of the general public also are permitted to inspect annual information returns of tax-exempt organizations and applications for recognition of tax-exempt status (and related documents) at the IRS National Office in Washington, D.C. or in the office of any district director.⁷⁹ A person making such a written request is notified by the IRS when the material is available for inspection at the IRS National Office, and where notes may be taken of the material open for inspection, photographs taken with the person's own equipment, or copies of such material obtained from the IRS for a fee.⁸⁰

The Secretary may withhold disclosure of certain information described in an organization's application for tax-exempt status if disclosure would: (1) divulge a trade secret, patent, process, style of work, or apparatus of the organization, and the Secretary determines that such disclosure would harm the organization; or (2) harm the national defense.⁸¹ The organization must apply to the Commissioner for a determination that the disclosure would violate one of these criteria.⁸² The organization will be given 15 days to contest an adverse determination before the information is made available for public inspection.⁸³

Section 6104(a)(1)(A) provides that “any papers submitted in support of” an application for tax-exempt status must be available for inspection. By regulation, the Treasury Department has limited the definition of supporting documents to papers submitted by the organization.⁸⁴ The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upheld this regulation in Lehrfeld v. Commissioner,⁸⁵ on the ground that it harmonizes the meanings of two provisions within the general rule that applications for tax exemption are subject to public disclosure.

In Lehrfeld, an attorney submitted a request to the IRS for a copy of a particular organization’s exemption application and all other documents available to the public under section 6104 and the FOIA. The attorney believed that prominent politicians might have written letters to the IRS to expedite the handling of the organization’s application for tax exemption. The IRS released certain materials responsive to the attorney’s request, but declined to release other documents on the ground that they fell outside the scope of section 6104 and therefore could not be disclosed under section 6103. According to the court, the documents the attorney sought were return information, and thus not subject to FOIA requests. Further, the court upheld the regulation on the ground that section 6104(a)(1)(A) was not intended to require disclosure of third-party documents.⁸⁶ The court found the plain meaning of section 6104(a)(1)(D) does not provide trade secret protection to third parties that submit documents in favor of another entity’s tax-exempt status application. If the disclosure requirements applied to third-party documents, then information regarding trade secrets would not be submitted to the IRS by third parties in support of tax-exempt status applications. Therefore, the court held that the regulation is a valid interpretation of section 6104(a)(1)(A).⁸⁷

Disclosure to State officials

With respect to section 501(c)(3) organizations, the IRS is required to notify the attorney general and the principal tax officer of the State in which the principal office of the organization is located and the State in which the organization was incorporated or created, of two types of final determinations: (1) the denial or revocation of tax-exempt status; or (2) a deficiency of tax under section 507, or Chapter 41 or 42.⁸⁸ Other appropriate officers of any State may request that the IRS provide notification to them of such determinations, either generally or with respect to a particular organization or type of organization.⁸⁹ At the request of an appropriate State officer, the IRS must make available for inspection and copying such returns, filed statements, and other records relating to such determinations as are relevant to a determination under State law.⁹⁰

Disclosure to Congressional committees

Any committee of the Congress may inspect exemption applications and any related papers held by the IRS.⁹¹

It generally recites the relevant facts, sets forth the applicable provisions of law, and shows the application of the law to the facts. Treas. reg. sec. 301.6110-2(d). In fiscal year 1999, the IRS issued 943 private letter rulings involving section 501(c) organizations; in fiscal year 1998, the IRS issued 1,059 private letter rulings involving section 501(c) organizations; and in fiscal year 1997, the IRS issued 975 private letter rulings involving section 501(c) organizations. Treas. reg. sec. 301.6110-2(f). Generally, a technical advice memorandum states the relevant facts, sets forth the applicable law, and states a legal conclusion. Treas. reg. sec. 301.6110-2(f). In fiscal year 1999, the IRS issued 22 technical advice memoranda involving section 501(c) organizations; in fiscal year 1998, the IRS issued 56 technical advice memoranda involving section 501(c) organizations; and in fiscal year 1997, the IRS issued 69 technical advice memoranda involving section 501(c) organizations. The IRS National Office component issues the advice to IRS field or service center employees, or to regional or district employees of Chief Counsel. Sec. 6110(i)(A)(i). The definition of Chief Counsel advice does not encompass advice issued from one IRS National Office component of the Office of Chief Counsel to another. The advice by definition conveys: (1) a legal interpretation of a revenue provision; (2) the IRS or Chief Counsel position or policy concerning a revenue provision; or (3) a legal interpretation of any law (Federal, State, or foreign) relating to the assessment or collection of liability under a revenue provision. - (1) the names, addresses, and other identifying details of the person to whom the written determination pertains and of any other person, other than a person with respect to whom a notation is made under subsection (d)(1) (relating to third party contacts), identified in the written determination or any background file document;

- (5) information the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;
- (6) information contained in or related to examination, operating, or condition reports prepared by, or on behalf of, or for use of an agency responsible for the regulation or supervision of financial institutions; and
- (7) geological and geophysical information and data, including maps, concerning wells.

organizations, disclosure under section 6110 is limited to letters and rulings unrelated to an organization's tax-exempt status.¹⁰¹

While section 6110 makes much IRS guidance public, its application to guidance relating to tax-exempt organizations is quite limited in comparison to guidance for taxable organizations. When section 6110 was enacted in 1976, Congress believed that section 6104 already permitted disclosure of guidance relating to tax-exempt organizations.¹⁰² Thus, section 6110(k)(1) provides, "this section shall not apply to any matter to which section 6104 applies." The regulations under section 6110 clarify which matters are within the ambit of section 6104 and, therefore, are not subject to disclosure under section 6110:

"[a]ny application filed with the Internal Revenue Service with respect to the qualification or exempt status of an organization . . .; any document issued by the Internal Revenue Service in which the qualification or exempt status of an organization is . . . granted, denied or revoked or the portion of any document in which technical advice with respect thereto is given to a district director; . . . the portion of any document issued by the Internal Revenue Service in which is discussed the effect on the qualification or exempt status of an organization of proposed transactions by such organization; and any document issued by the Internal Revenue Service in which is discussed the qualification or status of a [private foundation or private operating foundation].¹⁰³

In addition, the regulations under section 6104 provide that some determination letters and other documents relating to tax exemption that are not open to public inspection under section 6104(a)(1)(A) are nevertheless "within the ambit" of section 6104 for purposes of the disclosure provisions of section 6110.¹⁰⁴ The regulation explains that the following documents are, therefore, not available for public inspection under either section 6104 or 6110:

- (1) unfavorable rulings or determination letters issued in response to applications for tax exemption;
- (2) rulings or determination letters revoking or modifying a favorable determination letter;
- (3) technical advice memoranda relating to a disapproved application for tax exemption or the revocation or modification of a favorable determination letter;

¹⁰³ Treas. reg. sec. 301.6110-1(a).

¹⁰⁴ Treas. reg. sec. 301.6104(a)-1(i).

- (4) any letter or document filed with or issued by the IRS relating to whether a proposed or accomplished transaction is a prohibited transaction under section 503;
- (5) any letter or document filed with or issued by the IRS relating to an organization's status as a private foundation or private operating foundation, unless the letter or document relates to the organization's application for tax exemption; and
- (6) any other letter or document filed with or issued by the IRS which, although it relates to an organization's tax exempt status as an organization described in section 501(c), does not relate to that organization's application for tax exemption.¹⁰⁵

The effect of these limitations is that written determinations relating to exempt status issues are not released, even in redacted form. The IRS does, however, release written determinations issued to tax-exempt organizations that include issues that clearly are not within the ambit of section 6104, such as the application of the unrelated business income tax to a particular proposed transaction.

4. Penalties related to tax-exempt organization disclosure requirements

Penalties for failure to file timely or complete return

A penalty is imposed on a tax-exempt organization that either fails to file a Form 990 in a timely manner or fails to include all required information on a Form 990 of $20 for each day the failure continues (with a maximum penalty with respect to any one return of the lesser of $10,000 or five percent of the organization's gross receipts).¹⁰⁶ Organizations with annual gross receipts exceeding $1 million are subject to a penalty of $100 for each day the failure continues (with a maximum penalty with respect to any one return of $50,000). The IRS may make a written demand on an organization that has failed to file a timely or complete return specifying a date by which the return is to be filed or the information furnished. A penalty is imposed on any person failing to comply with the IRS demand equal to $10 for each day after the expiration of the time specified by the IRS during which the failure continues, subject to a maximum penalty of $5,000, with respect to any one return.¹⁰⁷ No penalty is imposed for failure to file in a timely manner or to include all required information if it is shown that the failure was due to reasonable cause.¹⁰⁸

Penalties for failure to allow public inspection or provide copies

Penalties are imposed on tax-exempt organizations that fail to allow public inspection or provide copies of certain annual returns or applications for exemption at a level of $20 per day

(with a maximum of $10,000 with respect to any one return).¹⁰⁹ No penalty is imposed with respect to a failure if it is shown that the failure was due to reasonable cause. In addition, there is a penalty of $5,000 imposed for willful failure to allow public inspections or provide copies.¹¹⁰

5. Other Federal tax law disclosure rules applicable to tax-exempt organizations

Disclosure relating to deductibility of solicited funds

Fundraising solicitations, including solicitations for contributions, annual membership dues, or other payments, made by certain tax-exempt organizations must include a statement that payments to those organizations are not deductible as charitable contributions for Federal income tax purposes.¹¹¹ The requirement generally applies to organizations described in section 501(c) unless the organization is eligible to receive contributions that are deductible as charitable gifts under section 170(c) (e.g., section 501(c)(3) organizations), or is otherwise excepted from the requirement. Thus, section 501(c)(4) social clubs, section 501(c)(5) labor unions, section 501(c)(6) trade associations, section 501(c)(7) social clubs, section 501(c)(8) and section 501(c)(10) fraternal organizations, and certain other organizations must comply with the nondeductibility disclosure requirement.

Failure to include the required statement may result in a penalty imposed on the organization of $1,000 for each day on which the failure occurred, subject to a maximum penalty on failures by any organization during any calendar year of $10,000. However, the $10,000 maximum penalty does not apply if the failure is due to intentional disregard of the nondeductibility disclosure requirement. In such case, the penalty is $1,000 or 50 percent of the aggregate cost of the solicitations that occurred on such day and with respect to which there was a failure to disclose.

Disclosure relating to information or services that are available free from the government Organizations described in section 501(c)(3), section 501(c)(4), or section 527(e) that sell information or routine services that could be readily obtained from an agency of the Federal government, either free or for a nominal fee, must include a statement when making an offer or solicitation that the information or service can be so obtained.¹¹² A penalty of the greater of $1,000 or 50 percent of the aggregate cost of the offers and solicitations that occurred on each day on which such failure to disclose occurred is imposed on the organization if the failure to make the required statement is due to intentional disregard of the disclosure requirement.

IV. ECONOMIC ANALYSIS OF THE BENEFITS OF TAX-EXEMPT STATUS

Tax-exempt organizations constitute a significant component of the U. S. economy. Data reported on Forms 990 and 990-EZ suggest that tax-exempt organizations held assets valued at more than $1.3 trillion and had total revenues greater than $800 billion in 1995.¹¹³ The total revenue of tax-exempt organizations in 1995 exceeded ten percent of U.S. gross domestic product.

All organizations described in section 501(c) of the Code receive tax benefits not available to other entities. The nature and extent of the tax benefits vary depending on the particular type of organization. The income, if any, of organizations described in section 501(c) generally is exempt from income taxes on business income. Organizations described in section 501(c)(3) of the Code may receive two additional tax benefits. First, qualifying 501(c)(3) organizations may receive contributions that are deductible in computing the income tax of the donor and such organizations also may receive bequests that are deductible from the taxable estate of the donor. Second, qualifying 501(c)(3) organizations may use the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds to finance the organization's capital expenditures. Thus, tax-exempt organizations receive a number of Federal tax benefits when compared to taxable entities. This part briefly reviews economic rationales that are offered for these tax benefits and discusses some of the economic effects that result from these benefits.

A. Exemption of "Income" From Business Level Income Taxes

Rationale for tax exemption

Several rationales have been offered for the general rule exempting the "income" of qualified organizations from business level income taxes.¹¹⁴ Some observe that charitable organizations provide many services in lieu of the provision of the same or similar services that otherwise would have to be provided by government. In this view, because governments are not subject to income taxation in the course of providing governmental services, exempting charitable organizations from income tax could be said to provide neutrality in the choice to provide certain services to the public through direct government operation and financing or through the private operation and mixed private and public financing of a tax-exempt organization.

Some have suggested that exemption from income tax may be justified as compensation for the difficulty that tax-exempt organizations have in obtaining capital. In general, the rules governing tax-exempt organizations prohibit such organizations from issuing shares of equity to raise capital. Lenders may be concerned about the risks of an organization whose entire capital is debt financed, and require higher interest rates on loans to tax-exempt organizations. Exemption from income taxation may permit a tax-exempt organization to accumulate internal capital more quickly and thereby compensate for the higher costs of external debt financing.¹¹⁵

Others suggest that tax-exempt organizations generally are run with a nonprofit motive. Because the organization is managed so as not to produce income, administrative ease for both the organization and the tax administrator provide a rationale for exemption of the organization from income taxation. Still others suggest that even to the extent that section 501(c)(3) organizations earn income, either portfolio income or active income, exempting the organization's income creates parity with funds from tax-deductible donations. If a third party had earned the income and donated it to the section 501(c)(3) organization, the income generally would be exempt from tax. Thus, they argue, the income should be exempt from income tax if earned directly by the section 501(c)(3) organization.¹¹⁶

¹¹⁵ See Richard Steinberg, "Unfair" Competition by Nonprofits and Tax Policy, 44 Nat'l Tax J. 351, 351-364 (1991); and Henry Hansmann, The Rationale for Exempting Nonprofit Corporations from the Corporate Income Tax, 91 Yale L.J. 54, 54-100 (1981). However, tax-exempt organizations may be able to raise "equity" capital through donations or membership dues.

¹¹⁶ Some analysts suggest an alternative reason for granting tax exemption to certain organizations. They argue consumers are at a substantial informational disadvantage relative to the sellers of certain complex goods or services and that informed decisions may be very difficult to make. The informational advantage of the seller may create the possibility that the seller could take advantage of the buyer. In such a circumstance, analysts suggest that if a tax-exempt organization were the seller, because the tax-exempt organization does not have owners to whom profits are paid, the tax-exempt organization may not have the incentive of a for-profit seller to take advantage of the buyer. In this analysis, consumers benefit because the tax-exempt organization helps them overcome the informational disadvantage they otherwise face when purchasing certain complex goods and services. For further discussion of this rationale, see Burton A. Weisbrod, The Nonprofit Economy (1988) and Dennis Zimmerman, Nonprofit Organizations, Social Benefits, and Tax Policy, 44 Nat'l Tax J. 341, 341-349 (1991).

Economic effects of exemption from income taxation

In one sense, every organization that elects to operate as a tax-exempt organization must believe that it receives some economic benefit from tax-exempt status. Even an organization not eligible to be a section 501(c)(3) organization whose goal is to operate over the long term so as not to earn a profit must perceive some benefit to tax-exempt status, or the organization could organize itself as a taxable business and, because it would not earn any income, generally not be subject to tax. In most cases, tax-exempt status offers tangible benefits even to those entities that strive to produce no taxable income. For example, an organization that successfully operates over the long term so as not to earn a profit may find that it operates at a surplus in some years, while in other years it operates at a deficit. Such surpluses generally may produce a tax liability in the current year, while deficits often must be carried forward. Because of the time value of money, if the organization were subject to the income tax, while its total tax payments over time might equal zero, the present value of tax liabilities could be positive. More generally, the present-law income tax measures income imprecisely. Entities which arguably have earned no economic income may accrue a positive tax liability. Tax-exempt status eliminates the effects of the timing differences and other imperfections of the present-law income tax.

To the extent a tax-exempt organization earns income, either portfolio income or active income, and that income is used to further the exempt purposes of the organization, one could say that the income was “donated” to the exempt purpose. Generally, in the case of a section 501(c)(3) organization, amounts donated to such an organization are excluded from the income of the donor, which for such an organization is equivalent to exempting the organization’s income from tax. However, the deductible donations of taxpayers may be subject to limitation as explained in Part III.A.3, above. A taxpayer subject to such a deduction limitation may carry forward the excess amount to subsequent tax years. Because of the time value of money, deferral of part of the deduction for a charitable contribution reduces the present value of the deduction, or alternatively stated, does not completely exempt from tax the income that was donated to the charity. With respect to its own portfolio or active income, however, tax-exempt status permits section 501(c)(3) organizations to gain the economic equivalent of the full value of such deductions, without the limitations that may be imposed on the deductions of individual taxpayers.

Efforts to raise funds for tax-exempt endeavors often lead tax-exempt organizations into the sale of goods or services which also may be offered by private sector enterprises. As explained in Part III.A.3, above, when such sales are related to the exempt purpose of the organization, any income that the sales generate is exempt from Federal income tax. If income is earned from unrelated activity, the income is subject to Federal income tax. Regardless of whether the income is subject to tax, tax-exempt organizations and private-sector enterprises do not compete from the same footing. It is difficult to assess the economic effects of competition between tax-exempt organizations and for-profit enterprises. One analyst concluded:

Whether a nonprofit expands into markets that are “related” to its exempt purpose or into other, unrelated, areas, the competition with proprietary firms affects nonprofits in important ways. Some are favorable: competition with proprietaries should stimulate efficient production, diversify revenue sources, and perhaps provide a stimulus to greater creativity. But some are unfavorable: becoming a multipurpose organization is likely to pose new administrative and managerial problems and most important, the pressure to perform profitably in the competitive marketplace can divert resources and energy from the organization’s principal public-type purposes even while total resources are being expanded. All these possible consequences are speculative; hard evidence does not exist.¹¹⁷

The uncertainty inherent in the notion of “related” and “unrelated” activities has led some to suggest that tax exemption might offer an organization a competitive advantage. If the purpose of the tax-exempt organization for engaging in activities which compete with for-profit enterprises is to raise funds to subsidize the organization’s exempt purpose, then both the tax-exempt organization and the for-profit enterprise share a common goal: to maximize profits from the endeavor. That is, both the tax-exempt organization and the for-profit enterprise would like the price to be as high as the market will bear, and a for-profit enterprise will be harmed no more by the entrance of the tax-exempt organization into the market than by the entrance of another for-profit enterprise.¹¹⁸ While the tax-exempt organization earns a greater net return than does the for-profit enterprise by virtue of its tax-exempt status, this extra return is to be devoted to its tax-exempt purpose.¹¹⁹

Some believe that tax-exempt organizations may use either the greater net return or, in the case of a section 501(c)(3) organization, the ability to solicit tax-deductible contributions, to charge a price less than the profit-maximizing price in the short run. By using tax-exempt benefits to charge a lower price than for-profit enterprises, the tax-exempt organization may drive for-profit enterprises from the market and subsequently earn monopoly profits. That is, the tax-exempt organization may forgo short term profits which could redound to the organization’s exempt purpose in order to earn greater long-term profits for the benefit of the exempt purpose. Aside from the possibility that predatory pricing may violate antitrust statutes, the viability of such a predatory strategy depends upon the conditions of the market place, as high profits usually induce entry by competitors. Competitive entry ultimately forces prices down, implying that the potential to earn monopoly profits in the long run may be limited,¹²⁰ which in turn would reduce the likelihood of predatory pricing.

¹¹⁷ Burton A. Weisbrod, The Nonprofit Economy, 114 (1988).

¹¹⁸ Similarly the tax-exempt organization would be harmed no more by the entrance of a for-profit entity into the market than by the entrance of another tax-exempt organization.

¹¹⁹ The tax-exempt organization often may accrue additional benefits by exemption from State and local income, sales, and property taxes.

Data

The Joint Committee staff does not include among its estimates of tax expenditures any item related to the exemption of tax-exempt organizations from income taxation. The Joint Committee staff has explained this as follows:

With respect to other nonprofit organizations, such as charities, tax-exempt status is not classified as a tax expenditure because the nonbusiness activities of such organizations generally must predominate and their unrelated business activities are subject to tax. In general, the imputed income derived from nonbusiness activities conducted by individuals or collectively by certain nonprofit organizations is outside the normal income tax base.¹²¹

It is consistent with this analysis to assert that there is value to the exemption from the income tax for qualified section 501(c) organizations. For example, just as the value of a charitable donation by an individual or taxable corporation can be estimated as the product of the value of the donation and the taxpayer's marginal tax rate, one could estimate the exemption from the corporate level tax for the portfolio earnings of a tax-exempt organization as the product of those earnings and the appropriate corporate marginal income tax rate. The amount of program service revenue earned by tax-exempt organizations or the excess of revenue from all sources over total expenses may give an indication of the magnitude of the benefit from exemption from income taxation.¹²²

Table 6, below, reports program service revenue, the excess of total revenue over expenses, and income from investments for certain qualifying organizations that filed Form 990 or Form 990-EZ for 1995. Table 6 also shows these figures in comparison to the total revenues, donations and grants received, and membership dues of those organizations. These data show that such organizations realized income from investments and from the sale of capital assets in excess of $75 billion in 1995. Alternatively, these data show that in 1995 the excess of total revenue over expenses exceeded $70 billion, so the exemption of such organizations from income taxation may have provided a significant benefit in aggregate.

B. Tax Deductibility of Charitable Donations

Rationale for tax deduction for charitable donations

Tax deductibility of charitable donations reduces the economic cost to the donor of his or her donation and encourages giving. There are a number of different rationales advanced for the deductibility of donations to charitable organizations described in section 501(c)(3). These rationales depend, in part, on differing views about the role of charitable organizations and the benefits they provide to society as a whole. One rationale for the charitable donation tax deduction is that income given to a charity should not be taxed because it does not enrich the giver. Others describe charitable organizations as providing many services at little or no direct cost to taxpayers, which services otherwise would have to be provided by the government at full cost to taxpayers. In this view, the tax deduction for voluntary charitable donations is seen as equivalent to deductions permitted for many State and local taxes. The charitable donation tax deduction could be said to provide neutrality in the choice to provide certain services to the public through direct government operation and financing or through the private operation and mixed private and public financing of a charitable organization.

Some observe that the activities of a number of charitable organizations are public in nature or provide significant spillover benefits to the public at large. For example, some charitable organizations maintain open spaces such as bird refuges. Open space is an example of a public good, that is, a good or service that may be simultaneously enjoyed by all. Other charitable organizations provide benefits that improve the health of specific individuals, such as through the provision of vaccinations, which provide spillover benefits¹²³ to the populace at large. Economists generally argue that, in the absence of a subsidy, the private market may provide insufficient levels of public goods or goods that create spillover benefits.¹²⁴ As discussed below, the tax deduction for charitable donations encourages such donations and thereby acts as a subsidy to the activities of charitable organizations. Accordingly, the philanthropic community and others believe the present-law deductions for the income tax and the estate and gift tax serve a social purpose.

A range of arguments for and against the tax deductibility of charitable donations can be made in assessing deductibility in the context of a theoretically ideal income tax system. Wholly apart from any incentive effect or intent to encourage charitable giving, some argue the gratuitous transfer of funds from an individual to a charity should not be treated as a personal consumption of income that should be subject to tax even under a theoretically pure, broad-based income tax ¹²³ Economists usually refer to such spillover benefits as “positive externalities,” that is, benefits accrue to the individual who consumes the good and also to other individuals who are “external” to the initial consumption of the good.

¹²⁴ See e.g., Richard A. Musgrave and Peggy B. Musgrave, Public Finance in Theory and Practice (1984); and Harvey S. Rosen, Public Finance (1988).

because the donation does not directly benefit the donor and, therefore, should represent a reduction in the wealth or well-being of the donor. Alternatively, one could view charitable giving as a purely personal expenditure, a deduction for which would be denied under an ideal income tax.¹²⁵ The tax deduction for charitable donations sometimes is referred to as a tax expenditure in that it may be considered to be analogous to a direct outlay program which would direct Federal funds to charitable organizations. Applying this analogy, the tax deduction for charitable donations is most similar to those direct spending programs that have no spending limits, and that are available as entitlements to those organizations which meet the statutory criteria established under section 501(c)(3).

Economic effects of tax deductions for charitable donations

As with any tax deduction or credit, the price to the donor of charitable giving that benefits from a tax incentive is reduced by the value of the tax benefit provided. For example, for a taxpayer who itemizes deductions and is in the 31-percent tax bracket, a $100 cash gift to charity reduces the taxpayer's taxable income by $100, and thereby reduces tax liability by $31. As a consequence, the $100 cash gift to charity reduces the taxpayer's after-tax income by only $69. Economists would say that, for this taxpayer, the price of giving $100 cash to charity is $69. With gifts of appreciated property, if a fair market value deduction is allowed (while the accrued appreciation is not included in income), the price of giving $100 worth of appreciated property is as low as $40.40.¹²⁶ The price of giving is determined as one minus the taxpayer's marginal tax rate. Alternatively stated, the value of the tax deduction is the amount deducted multiplied by the taxpayer's marginal tax rate. The charitable deduction is worth more the higher the taxpayer's marginal tax rate. Because higher-income taxpayers generally are in higher marginal tax rate brackets and are more likely to itemize deductions, the charitable donation tax deduction generally is more valuable to higher income taxpayers than to lower income taxpayers who often do not itemize such deductions and who generally are in lower marginal tax brackets.¹²⁷

While factors other than tax benefits also motivate charitable giving, the preponderance of evidence suggests that the charitable donation tax deduction has been a stimulant to charitable giving, at least for higher-income individuals. Economic studies generally have established that charitable giving responds to the price of giving. While the economic literature suggests that individuals alter their giving in response to changes in the price of giving, there is less consensus as to how large are the changes in donations induced by the tax deductibility of charitable donations.¹²⁸ Some evidence suggests that higher-income taxpayers are more responsive to the ¹²⁷ The obverse statement is that the tax price is lower the higher the marginal tax rate and that higher income taxpayers generally have a lower tax price of giving than do lower income taxpayers. A taxpayer who does not itemize deductions receives no value from the tax deductibility of charitable donations and the tax price of giving $1.00 is $1.00 of forgone other expenditures.

Some analysts have suggested that the charitable estate tax deduction creates a strong incentive to make charitable bequests. A limited number of studies have examined the effects of estate taxes on charitable bequests. Most of these studies have concluded that, after controlling for the size of the estate and other factors, deductibility of charitable bequests encourages taxpayers to make charitable bequests. Recent studies examining this question include David Joulfaian, Charitable Bequests and Estate Taxes, 42 Nat'l Tax J. 169, 169-180 (1991); and Gerald Auten and David Joulfaian, Charitable Contributions and Intergenerational Transfers, 59 J. Pub. Econ. 55, 55-68 (1996). Each of these studies estimates a tax price elasticity in excess of 1.6 in absolute value. This implies that for each 10-percent reduction in the tax price, with the tax price defined as one minus the marginal tax rate, there is a greater than 16-percent increase in the dollar value of charitable bequests. Such a finding implies that charities receive a greater incentives provided by the tax deduction. Hence, charities whose patrons are predominantly higher-income (e.g., universities and hospitals) might see more tax-induced charitable donations than charities whose patrons are not predominantly higher income persons, such as religious organizations.¹²⁹

If taxpayers do respond to the incentive effect of the tax deduction for charitable donations, then the charitable sector would become larger because it receives more donations than it would in the absence of the preferential tax treatment. Depending upon the magnitude of the additional or induced donations, the increase in the size of the charitable sector may be less than, equal to, or greater than the tax revenue forgone. If the increase in donations to the charitable sector induced by the tax deduction exceeds the revenue lost to the government, then the tax deduction could be said to be an efficient means of providing public support to such charitable functions.¹³⁰

Between 1984 and 1997, total individual donations, including charitable bequests, to charities grew from $60.50 billion to $135.58 billion, while corporate donations declined from $8.20 billion to $5.92 billion. See Table 7, below.

dollar value of bequests than the Treasury loses in forgone tax revenue. Not all studies find such responsiveness of charitable bequests to the marginal estate tax rate. Thomas Barthold and Robert Plotnick, Estate Taxation and Other Determinants of Charitable Bequests, 37 Nat'l Tax J. 225, 225-237 (1984), estimated that marginal estate tax rates had no effect on charitable bequests.

¹²⁹ See, Charles Clotfelter, Impact of Tax Reform on Charitable Giving: A 1989 Perspective, in Do Taxes Matter? 203 (Joel Slemrod ed., 1990).

¹³⁰ In the economics literature, the notion of elasticity is used as a measure of taxpayer response to a change in the “tax price” or value of the tax deduction. An elasticity greater than one in absolute value (that is, a value smaller than negative one or a value greater than positive one) implies that recipients of charitable donations receive more in increased funding than the government loses in forgone revenue. See Charles Clotfelter, Federal Tax Policy and Charitable Giving (1985).

Individual donations claimed as itemized deductions on individual tax returns have grown in every year, excepting from 1986 to 1987.¹³¹ Charitable bequests showed the most rapid growth over the period and corporate donations the slowest growth. For each line in Table 7, the measure of charitable donations has grown more rapidly than the rate of inflation over this period.¹³² However, this real, inflation-adjusted, growth did not occur evenly over the period. Between 1984 and 1990, the real growth in individual donations claimed as itemized deductions was more modest than was real growth since 1990. The value of charitable donations from corporations declined in real terms between 1984 and 1991.

The Joint Committee staff estimates that, for 1999, 32.5 million taxpayers will claim more than $97 billion in charitable donation tax deductions. See Table 8, below.

¹³¹ Most analysts attribute the high level of donations in 1986 followed by the lower level of donations in 1987 to the anticipation and enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 which lowered expected future marginal tax rates for many taxpayers, thereby increasing the expected price of future donations. In addition, certain other modifications to charitable tax deductions as part of the individual alternative minimum tax may have altered the timing of some donations to charities.

¹³² The price level, as measured by changes in the consumer price index ("CPI"), increased by 54.4 percent over the period 1984 through 1997.

[1] The income concept used to place tax returns into income categories is adjusted gross income (“AGI”) plus: employer contributions for health plans; employer contributions for the purchase of life insurance; employer share of payroll taxes; workers compensation; tax-exempt interest; excluded income of U.S. citizens living abroad; nontaxable Social Security benefits; insurance value of Medicare benefits; and alternative minimum tax preference items.

One measure of the magnitude of economic benefit to the donor that the deductibility of charitable donations provides is an estimate of the tax expenditure related to such deductions. A tax expenditure is measured by the difference between tax liability under present law and the tax liability that would result from a recomputation of tax without benefit of the tax expenditure provision.¹³³ Table 9, below, provides the Joint Committee staff estimates of tax expenditures related to charitable deductions to educational organizations, health organizations, and other charitable organizations. The Joint Committee staff estimates the annual value of the tax expenditure relating to charitable donations to educational organizations by individuals to be approximately $4.0 billion annually, to health organizations to be approximately $3.0 billion annually, and to all other charitable organizations to be over $21.0 billion annually.

¹³³ Taxpayer behavior is assumed to remain unchanged for tax expenditure estimate purposes. For a discussion of the concept of “tax expenditures,” see Joint Committee on Taxation, Estimates of Federal Tax Expenditures for Fiscal Years 2000-2004 (JCS-13-99), December 22, 1999.

C. Implicit Subsidies to Capital Financing for Section 501(c)(3) Organizations: Tax-Exempt Bonds

Rationales for permitting section 501(c)(3) organizations access to tax-exempt financing

Access to tax-exempt financing permits section 501(c)(3) organizations to borrow funds at interest rates less than would otherwise prevail. As noted above, many describe charitable organizations as providing services that otherwise would have to be provided by State or local governments. Because State and local governments may use tax-exempt financing, providing access to tax-exempt financing to section 501(c)(3) organizations creates parity in the cost of provision of a service by such organizations and State and local governments. As a result, the choice between the provision of a service through a section 501(c)(3) organization or a State or local government is not biased by a perceived cost advantage of a government compared to private provision by a section 501(c)(3) organization.

Others have suggested that financial institutions and markets may incorrectly perceive the risks of lending to section 501(c)(3) organizations. They suggest that the implicit Federal subsidy created by the use of tax-exempt financing lowers financing costs for qualifying section 501(c)(3) organizations to more appropriate levels. Alternatively, they posit that because the activities of charitable organizations provide significant spillover benefits to the public at large, it is appropriate to subsidize the cost of providing these beneficial services and that it is appropriate to encourage the provision of activities that create such spillover benefits.

Economic effects of the access to tax-exempt bond financing

Interest on State or local government bonds is tax-exempt when the proceeds are used to finance activities of those governmental units or when the bonds are repaid with governmental funds (e.g., taxes). States and local governments also may act as conduits to provide tax-exempt financing for limited activities conducted and paid for by private businesses or individuals (“private activity bonds”). One permitted type of such private activity conduit financing is for the exempt activities of section 501(c)(3) organizations (“qualified 501(c)(3) bonds”). This exception does not include financing for unrelated business activities of such organizations. Issuance of qualified 501(c)(3) bonds is not subject to the annual State volume limitations that apply to issuance of most private activity bonds.

The ability to finance capital and operating costs with tax-exempt bonds may substantially reduce the cost of debt financing to section 501(c)(3) organizations. To illustrate, assume the interest rate on taxable debt is 10 percent. If an investor in the 36-percent marginal income tax bracket purchased a taxable debt instrument, his after-tax rate of return would be the 10-percent interest less a tax of 36 percent on the interest received for a net return of 6.4 percent. If, as an alternative, this investor could purchase a tax-exempt bond, all other things such as credit worthiness being equal, the investor would earn a better after-tax return by accepting any yield greater than 6.4 percent.¹³⁴ In the market, the yield spread between a tax-exempt bond and a comparable taxable bond is determined by the marginal buyer of the bonds; in today's market, these yield spreads are generally less than 28 percent.¹³⁵ Because the yield spread arises from forgone tax revenue, economists say that tax-exempt financing creates an implicit Federal subsidy to the issuer. However, with many investors in different tax brackets, the loss of Federal receipts is greater than the reduction in the tax-exempt issuers' interest saving.¹³⁶ The difference accrues to investors in tax brackets higher than those that would be implied by the yield spread between taxable and tax-exempt bonds. Nevertheless, as a consequence of the ability to use tax-exempt financing, a section 501(c)(3) organization generally can borrow at more favorable interest rates than individuals or other entities.

Data

Available evidence suggests that the greatest use of tax-exempt bond financing by section 501(c)(3) organizations is related to educational and health facilities. Table 10, below, provides estimates of the tax expenditure related to the use of tax-exempt bond financing of educational and health facilities by section 501(c)(3) organizations. The table presents estimates that the value of the tax expenditure related to such tax-exempt bond financing exceeds $1.0 billion annually for both educational facilities and health facilities.

¹³⁴ More generally, if the investor's marginal tax rate is t and the taxable bond yields r , the investor is indifferent between a tax-exempt yield, r_e , and $(1-t)r$.

V. ANALYSIS OF ISSUES RELATING TO THE DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION WITH RESPECT TO TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

A. Discussion of Issues Relating to Disclosure of Information Regarding Tax-Exempt Organizations

Introduction

The statutory mandate for this study requires the Joint Committee to determine whether the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. Making this determination involves the balancing of sometimes competing policy objectives. This balancing generally involves, on the one hand, the organization's right to privacy and concerns about misuses of information and, on the other hand, the legitimate public interest in information regarding tax-exempt organizations. Also involved is the question of the effect of disclosure on voluntary compliance with the tax laws. Other factors may be relevant, such as whether disclosure would impose additional burdens on tax-exempt organizations and the effect of disclosure on donors and prospective donors. A similar balancing occurs with respect to determining whether to allow disclosure of returns and return information of taxable persons.

Organizations' right to privacy and the public interest in disclosure

In the case of taxable persons, the balancing of issues regarding disclosure has resulted in a general presumption against disclosure; that is, disclosure of returns and return information is not permitted unless the disclosure is specifically authorized. The general presumption against disclosure of returns and return information stems primarily from taxpayers' right to privacy.¹³⁷ Exceptions to the general rule of nondisclosure are provided only in limited, specific circumstances where the need for the information is found to outweigh the taxpayer's privacy interest. Even in those cases when disclosure is permitted, the disclosure is not public disclosure; return information (such as written determinations involving a taxpayer) is made public only in redacted form so that the taxpayer involved cannot be identified.¹³⁸

Like taxable persons, tax-exempt organizations may assert a right to privacy regarding their activities and interactions with the IRS. However, for some time, different disclosure rules have applied to tax-exempt organizations than to taxable persons and more recent changes in the law have led to increased levels of public disclosure of returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations. The present-law rules requiring disclosure of returns and return information relating to tax-exempt organizations reflect a determination that, because such organizations are supported by the public, both through the tax benefits associated with tax-exempt status and, in some cases, direct contributions,¹³⁹ such organizations have a different expectation of privacy than taxable persons and the public has a strong interest in information regarding such organizations.¹⁴⁰

¹³⁷ For a discussion of the policy issues regarding section 6103, see Part Three of Volume I of this study.

The significance of the benefits of tax-exempt status, and the public's right to information that accompanies such benefits, has been described as follows:

[T]he proposed amendment requires annual reports from each and every foundation, to the end that those foundations will act in the public interest, and also so that interested parties, the general public, the Internal Revenue Service, congress and the committees concerned will have accurate information...

[T]ax exemption is a high privilege. I believe the operation of a tax exempt foundation is a public trust; and starting from the premise, I believe that all the business, all the transactions, all the receipts, all the investments, all the grants and contributions made by the foundation to individuals or to institutions, are of public concern.¹⁴¹

The recognition of the public's right to information also has precedent in other areas. For example, Federal securities laws require publicly-traded companies to disclose considerable information regarding their activities and financial positions. These disclosure rules recognize that the public has a right to such information because the public invests in such companies. Similarly, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended ("ERISA"), requires disclosure of information regarding pension plans. Federal election laws require ¹³⁹ See the discussion in Part III., above, for an analysis of the theory and economic benefit of tax-exempt status.

¹⁴⁰ Underlying the disclosure rules for tax-exempt organizations may also be a belief that entities' right to privacy is not as compelling as that of individuals. The Privacy Act reflects this view--its protections apply only to individuals. Another possible rationale for disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations is that, to the extent that tax-exempt organizations are viewed as providing services that otherwise would be provided by the Government, their operations should be open to the public as are the operations of the Government.

disclosure of campaign financing information.¹⁴² In each of these cases, the public interest or right to information has been found to outweigh the rights of individuals or organizations to privacy.

As in other cases in which public disclosure is required, public disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations enables the public to provide oversight of such organizations and the activities in which they are involved. Disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations also allows the public to determine whether the organizations should be supported—either through continued tax benefits or contributions of donors—and whether changes in the laws regarding such organizations are needed.

Specific types of information in which the public has an interest

The public has an interest in information about the tax-exempt sector as a whole, as well as in information regarding specific organizations. The public has an interest in knowing whether tax-exempt organizations are complying with the law, how such organizations are carrying out their exempt purposes, and whether the tax benefits provided to such organizations are accomplishing their purposes and should be continued, modified, or eliminated. Members of the public who wish to donate funds to tax-exempt organizations also need to know whether the donation will be tax deductible.

While some of the information in which the public has an interest is relevant to determining whether a tax-exempt organization satisfies applicable legal requirements, the information required by members of the public, including potential and current donors, may go beyond the minimum required to determine compliance with the law.

The information of interest to the public, particularly donors, includes the following:

- the identity of the organization;¹⁴³
- the charitable purpose or purposes of the organization and whether the organization operates in a manner consistent with its stated purposes;
- the specific means by which the organization accomplishes its purposes;
- whether the organization is (and has been) in compliance with applicable laws;
- the identities and backgrounds of those responsible for major decision-making within the organization;
- whether the organization’s officers, directors or other principals have engaged in improper transactions with the organization (or other nonprofit organizations);

¹⁴² The disclosures required under the Federal securities and Federal election laws are described in Part B., below.

¹⁴³ Many tax-exempt organizations have similar names or do business under a name other than the organization’s legal name, and some donors may believe they have made a contribution to one organization when in fact it was made to another with a similar name.

- whether the organization has any tax-exempt or taxable affiliates and, if so, the nature of such affiliates and information regarding transactions between the organization and such affiliates ;
- the fund raising practices and policies of the organization;
- whether the organization shares donor information with other organizations;
- detailed financial information regarding the organization, including sources and uses of funds; and
- how much of the donation will be used to support the efforts in which the donor is interested (e.g., will a significant portion be retained by professional fund raisers).

Effect of public disclosure of returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations

The public disclosure of returns and return information of tax-exempt organizations assists the public in providing oversight of tax-exempt organizations. There are a variety of benefits typically associated with this oversight, including increased compliance with the law by tax-exempt organizations and more informed giving by donors.

Effect of public disclosure on compliance

While disclosure of returns and return information with respect to taxable persons has generally been believed to compromise voluntary compliance,¹⁴⁴ public oversight of tax-exempt organizations generally is viewed as increasing compliance with Federal and State laws.¹⁴⁵ Increased compliance may result from a number of factors. Tax-exempt organizations may make greater efforts to comply with the law knowing that their activities will be subject to public scrutiny and that a “clean” public record will assist in the solicitation of donations. Public disclosure may also increase detection of violations of the law, and the fear of detection may spur greater compliance with the law by some who would not otherwise comply. Public disclosure may also increase compliance by making more information regarding the law available to tax-exempt organizations.

Providing increased disclosure of IRS materials and rulings information may lead to fairer application of the Federal tax laws by enabling taxpayers and others to determine if the IRS is applying the law in a consistent manner. This, in turn, may also increase voluntary compliance; organizations (and taxpayers generally) may be more willing to comply with the law if they perceive that the system as a whole is fair.

¹⁴⁴ See discussion in Part Three of Volume I of this study.

¹⁴⁵ See, e.g., Robert C. DeGaudenzi, Tax-Exempt Public Charities: Increasing Accountability and Compliance, 36 Cath. U. L. Rev. 203, 221 (1995)(increasing amount and quality of information available to the general public is “an essential element” in improving compliance); Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Ways and Means, U.S. House of Representatives, Report on Reforms to Improve the Tax Rules Governing Public Charities, WMCP 103-26, 103d Cong., 2nd Sess., at 19 (1994) (“[p]ublic oversight of charities is critical to ensuring charities’ overall compliance with the tax laws”).

Not all agree that increased public disclosure will lead to increased compliance. Some argue that increased disclosure will not result in an increase in the quality and quantity of information received. It has been suggested that tax-exempt organizations may attempt to manipulate publicly available information so that the public perceives the information in a more favorable way, and that persons who misuse tax-exempt organization funds will actively conceal information. Some argue that organizations may be reluctant to bring violations of the law to the attention of the IRS or work with the IRS to correct a problem if they know that the violation will be made public.

In response to such arguments, it has been noted that there may be ways to address such issues. For example, the disclosure rules could be modified to reduce the flexibility regarding characterization of expenses, thus reducing opportunities for manipulation. Penalties for violations of the law could be tailored to provide an incentive for organizations to detect and report violations to the IRS. Disclosure could be limited to only certain violations, such as violations relating to tax-exempt status. On the other hand, some argue that the public has an interest in all violations, and that they all should be disclosed.

Effect of public disclosure on charitable giving

Recently there have been a number of well-publicized cases involving misuse of charitable funds.¹⁴⁶ While such misuses are not typical of the operations of tax-exempt organizations generally, it has been noted that such scandals undermine the public faith in the tax-exempt sector as a whole and that public faith in tax-exempt organizations is key to maintaining the viability of such organizations, both with respect to their tax-exempt status as well as their ability to attract donors.¹⁴⁷ Increased public disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations may help to increase confidence in the tax-exempt sector in a number of ways. For example, as discussed above, increased disclosure may reduce the incidence of improper transactions. Increased public disclosure may also help remove any taint from scandals by making the public aware that most organizations are operated in an appropriate manner. An open book policy regarding the operations of tax-exempt organizations may also help to create the impression that such organizations have nothing to fear from disclosure and may even welcome it.

¹⁴⁶ See, e.g., DeGaudenzi, supra, at 203-206.

¹⁴⁷ See, e.g., Consuelo Lauda Kertz, Executive Compensation Dilemmas in Tax-Exempt Organizations: Reasonableness, Comparability, and Disclosure, 71 Tul. L. Rev. 819, 858-59 (1997) (“Accountability for financial performance and charitable program outcomes are important aspects of keeping the public trust, and that accountability is enhanced by disclosure.”)

On the other hand, some tax-exempt organizations have expressed the concern that the disclosure of some information, such as transactions that may involve self dealing, will deter donors. Some counter that such a result may be appropriate and that donors and the public generally have a right to information regarding the proper and improper uses of funds by tax-exempt organizations. Without such information, donors may not be able to make the best decisions about which organizations to support.

Discussion of factors to be taken into account in developing disclosure rules

In developing specific rules regarding disclosure of returns and return information regarding tax-exempt organizations, a number of factors should be taken into account and balanced against the public interest in information. Some of these factors are discussed below.

Costs of disclosure

In determining what disclosure is appropriate, the direct costs of disclosure should be taken into account. In some cases the cost of disclosure may fall on the organization (and its donors or other funding sources) and in some cases the cost may fall on the IRS (i.e., taxpayers generally). Direct costs that may be incurred in complying with disclosure requirements include the cost of compiling information, storing information, and responding to requests for information. In the case of large organizations, the costs of disclosure may not be a significant portion of the overall budget of the organization. However, in the case of smaller organizations, disclosure costs may impose a significant burden. In determining whether to require disclosure and, if so, whether the disclosure should be made by the organization or the IRS, factors to take into account include whether it would be less costly for the IRS or the organization to make the disclosure, whether there are ways to reduce the cost of disclosure (e.g., through the use of electronic means), and whether the cost of the disclosure is appropriate relative to the public benefit of the disclosure.

Benefits of disclosure

Disclosure rules must be developed with a view toward ensuring that the information required to be made available will be responsive to the needs giving rise to the disclosure. More information is not necessarily better; rather, information needs to be tailored to those who will use it. For example, some have commented that the current Form 990, while containing valuable information, may also be confusing, particularly to members of the general public. Any proposals relating to disclosure should be examined to determine whether they will in fact serve the purposes for which disclosure is made.

The IRS as the repository of information regarding tax-exempt organizations

Another issue that arises with respect to disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations is whether the IRS should be the repository for all information in which the public has an interest. The IRS needs information in order to determine whether a tax-exempt organization is complying with the Federal tax laws, both as to the initial determination of tax-exempt status and the operation of the organization. It has been recognized that the role of the IRS with respect to tax-exempt organizations is different than the usual role of the IRS. In the case of taxable persons, the IRS is concerned with determining whether the proper amount of tax is paid. Given the nature of the law regarding tax-exempt organizations, the role of the IRS is broader than determining whether any tax is due and should be paid.

This differing role was recognized in 1974, when as part of the reforms contained in the ERISA, the Congress statutorily created the Office of Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations (“EP/EO”) under the direction of an Assistant Commissioner.¹⁴⁸ EP/EO was created to oversee deferred compensation plans and organizations exempt from tax under section 501(a).

In general, EP/EO was established in response to concerns about the level of IRS resources devoted to oversight of employee plans and tax-exempt organizations. The legislative history to the provision establishing EP/EO states that, with respect to administration of laws relating to employee plans and tax-exempt organizations, “the natural tendency is for the Service to emphasize those areas that produce revenue rather than those areas primarily concerned with maintaining the integrity and carrying out the purposes of exemption provisions.”¹⁴⁹

As part of the general provisions relating to the reorganization of the IRS, the IRS Reform Act eliminated the statutory requirement that a separate EP/EO office be created. The legislative history to the IRS Reform Act makes it clear, however, that the Congress continued to recognize the special role of the IRS with respect to tax-exempt organizations. The Senate Committee report on the IRS Reform Act states that it was intended that the IRS create a comparable structure to EP/EO administratively “to ensure that adequate resources within the IRS are devoted to oversight of the tax-exempt sector.”¹⁵⁰ The Report further states: “given the magnitude of the sectors EP/EO is charged with regulating, as well as the unique nature of its mandate, an adequately funded EP/EO is extremely important to the efficient and fair administration of the Federal tax system. Accordingly, financial resources for EP/EO should not be constrained on the basis that EP/EO is a ‘non-core’ function; rather, EP/EO, like all functions of the IRS, should be funded so as to promote the efficient and fair administration of the Federal tax system.”¹⁵¹

Despite the broader role of the IRS with respect to tax-exempt organizations, the primary need of the IRS for information is to determine whether an organization is complying with the Federal tax laws. While this information is useful to the general public, others, such as donors, may require additional information.¹⁵² The issue is whether it is appropriate to require that information not strictly relevant to enforcing the tax laws be included on Federal tax forms.

Requiring information regarding tax-exempt organizations on their Federal tax form helps to provide some consistency, may make information more accessible, and may reduce the burdens on organizations by reducing the need to respond to further requests for information at the State level. For example, many States impose financial disclosure requirements on tax-exempt entities. In most cases, these requirements can be complied with by filing IRS Form 990 with the State.¹⁵³ However, if the Federal Government does not collect information desired by most States, it is likely that many organizations would be required to file additional information. Providing this information in a single place and format may also make it easier for organizations to respond to requests for information. On the other hand, the IRS may have less interest in enforcing information gathering requirements that are not relevant for its needs. Lack of enforcement may compromise the quality of information provided. On the other hand, enforcement efforts with respect to information of limited interest to the IRS may be an inefficient use of IRS resources.

It may be appropriate in some cases for information to come from sources other than tax filings. There are currently other means by which those with an interest in information regarding tax-exempt organizations can obtain it. For example, State laws may impose their own requirements, and law enforcement officials have other means to legally compel organizations to provide information. In addition, there are private groups that evaluate tax-exempt organizations, and because of the benefits of receiving a positive evaluation, many organizations voluntarily comply with requests for information from such groups. In addition, private organizations may be helpful in compiling and summarizing information regarding tax-exempt organizations.

¹⁵¹ Id. As part of the IRS reorganization, the previous responsibilities of EP/EO have now been transferred to the newly designated Tax Exempt/Government Entities Division.

¹⁵² Others may also have an interest in information regarding tax-exempt entities. For example, as described more fully below in Part VI.D., State Attorneys General (or other State law enforcement officers) have an interest in information that will enable them to enforce State charities laws. The Congress has an oversight responsibility regarding the Federal tax laws applicable to charities, both with respect to compliance with the law by such entities and enforcement of the law by the IRS. The Congress also has a need for information in order to set and evaluate policy objectives and to determine whether existing laws are fulfilling the purposes for which they were enacted.

¹⁵³ Nearly all States that require annual financial reporting accept Form 990, although some require supplements.

Application of disclosure rules to different types of tax-exempt organizations

Some have commented that different disclosure rules may be appropriate for different types of tax-exempt organizations. Present law defines many different types of tax-exempt organizations. The rules applicable to these organizations vary, and it has been suggested that public interest in information regarding certain types of organizations is different than the public interest in other types of organizations. For example, the public interest in information regarding organizations that do not solicit funds from the general public may be less than in organizations that do. Determining whether different rules would be appropriate for different types of organizations would involve an analysis of the various types of organizations in order to determine whether the differences are in fact sufficient to merit a different policy regarding disclosure.

B. Other Instances in Which the Federal Government Plays a Role in Serving Public Interest by Requiring Disclosure of Information

1. Federal securities laws

Transactions involving the sale and purchase of securities are subject to regulation under Federal law and State law. The primary Federal securities laws are the Securities Act of 1933 (the “Securities Act”) and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the “Exchange Act”). The Securities Act generally prohibits (1) the offer and sale of a security that is not registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission (the “SEC”), and (2) fraudulent or deceptive practices in the offer or sale of a security.¹⁵⁴ The Exchange Act contains a variety of provisions applicable to issued and outstanding securities.

The first administrative release under the Securities Act, issued on the date the Securities Act was signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, indicates that the primary purpose of the first Federal securities law was disclosure:

The basic policy of the act is that of informing investors of the facts concerning securities to be offered for sale in interstate and foreign commerce and providing protection against fraud and misrepresentation. It will be the aim and purpose of the [SEC] under the authority of the act to prevent further exploitation of the public by the sale of fraudulent and worthless securities through misrepresentation, to place adequate and true information before investors, and to protect honest enterprise seeking capital by honest representations against the competition afforded by securities offered through crooked promotion and misrepresentation. . . .

. . . the Commission intends to administer the act so as to give purchasers of securities full and accurate information and at the same time interfere as little as possible with the legitimate financing of legitimate business. The Commission is fully aware of the magnitude and importance of the responsibility imposed upon it by this act

The public should thoroughly understand that the Commission is not authorized to pass in any sense upon the value or soundness of any security. Its sole function is to see that full and accurate information as to the security is made available to purchasers and the public, and that no fraud is practiced in connection with the sale of the security. Speculative securities may still be offered and the public is as free to buy them as ever. The Commission’s duty is to see that the security is truthfully presented to prospective purchasers. The fact that a description of the security and of the concern issuing the security is filed with the Commission is in no sense and must not be regarded as an endorsement or approval of the security or the concern by the Commission.¹⁵⁵

The Securities Act typically requires a company that intends to issue securities to prepare and file with the SEC a registration statement containing information that relates to both the company and the securities offering. The registration statement consists of two parts. Part I of the registration statement is referred to as the “prospectus,” which the company must give to each person to whom the company offers the securities. Part II of the registration statement contains detailed information and exhibits that the SEC makes available for inspection by the public. If a company’s securities are purchased by more than a specified number of shareholders and the value of the company’s assets exceed a specified amount, the company also must register under the Exchange Act and must file with the SEC periodic reports that contain many of the same disclosures required in a registration statement filed under the Securities Act. As a result of this overlap, the SEC has adopted a disclosure system that integrates the disclosures required under the Securities Act and the Exchange Act. The primary disclosure requirements under this integrated disclosure system are:

- Descriptions of the development and operation of the business, certain legal proceedings other than routine litigation incidental to business, and the company’s publicly-traded common equity, including the number of shareholders, the high and low prices, and the frequency and amount of any cash dividends and a detailed description of the securities being offered.
- A table of financial data that highlights significant financial trends in the business for the five most recent years of operation (and any additional years to ensure that the information provided is not misleading), and management's discussion and analysis of information that is available to the company without undue effort or expense and that does not clearly appear in the company's financial statements, including material events and uncertainties known to management that would cause reported financial information not to be necessarily indicative of future operating results or of future financial condition.
- If an independent accountant has resigned or was dismissed in the past two fiscal years, the circumstances of the accountant's dismissal or decision to leave, whether financial statements were modified from the version recommended by the accountant, and any information relating to the inaccuracy of financial statements or laxness in financial controls necessary to make an audit statement accurate.

¹⁵⁵ Securities Act Release No. 1 (1933).

- Biographical information (including any legal proceedings that have occurred in the past five years that are material to ability or integrity) on directors, executive officers, promoters and control persons, description of executive compensation, including all compensation awarded to the chief executive officer and the four most highly compensated executive officers in addition to the chief executive officer for the last three fiscal years, a stock performance graph comparing the company's stock performance to specified indices, and a report from the compensation committee of the company's board of directors on its philosophy for setting executive compensation.
- Name, address, and number of shares and percentage of securities owned with respect to beneficial owners who hold more than five percent of any class of voting securities, the aggregate security ownership of management, ownership by directors, the chief executive officer and the four most highly paid executives, and any arrangements for change of control known to the company, including takeover defense measures.
- Descriptions of certain relationships, transactions, and proposed transactions involving the company and a direct or indirect material interest of a director or executive officer of the company, a nominee for director, a five-percent beneficial owner or any immediate family member of the foregoing, and description of failure to timely report as required any transactions involving company insiders.
- A summary of material information contained in a prospectus and risk factors that make the offering of the company's securities speculative or risky.
- A general description of how the proceeds of the offering of the company's securities will be used and, under certain circumstances, a description of the reasons for the offering price, a comparison of the contribution from the public offering and the cash contribution of officers and other affiliates for securities acquired in the past five years, and if securities registered for the public offering will be offered by existing stockholders, the relationship between the stockholder and the company in the past three fiscal years, the amount of securities of the class offered that are owned by the stockholder before the public offering, and the amount of the security that will be owned by the stockholder after the public offering.
- Information concerning roles and interests of underwriters, legal counsel, promoters, and experts with respect to the public offering, a description of indemnification of officers, directors and controlling persons of the registrant against liability under the Securities Act, a statement disclosing the SEC's position on the unenforceability of such indemnification, and a description of the type and scope of indemnification any statute, or the company's charter or by-laws, of any director or officer from liability while acting in such capacity.

- A detailed list of all estimated expenses related to the public offering of the securities which includes state and Federal taxes as well as printing and other fees associated with the offering.
- Exhibits consisting of various contracts, agreements and governing instruments, generally including underwriting agreements, acquisition agreements, articles of incorporation and bylaws, opinions of counsel and material contracts.¹⁵⁶

In 1993, the SEC began to require electronic filing of most required disclosure documents through its Electronic Data Gathering, Analysis, and Retrieval (EDGAR) system. EDGAR performs automated collection, validation, indexing, acceptance, and forwarding of submissions by companies and others who are required by law to file forms with the SEC. The primary purpose of EDGAR is to increase the efficiency and fairness of the securities market for the benefit of investors, corporations, and the economy by accelerating the receipt, acceptance, dissemination, and analysis of time-sensitive corporate information filed with the SEC. EDGAR filings are posted to the SEC site on the World Wide Web within twenty-four hours after the date of filing.¹⁵⁷

2. Federal election laws

Attempts to establish comprehensive campaign finance reform began after the 1896 presidential election in response to stories of corporations financing candidates' campaigns in hopes of influencing subsequent legislation. The Tillman Act, enacted in 1907, prohibited corporations and national banks from contributing money to Federal campaigns. The Congress passed the first Federal campaign disclosure legislation three years later. Although this legislation originally applied only to House elections, the Congress amended the law in 1911 to expand its scope to Senate elections and to set spending limits for all Congressional candidates. The Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 (the "1925 Act") strengthened the disclosure requirements and increased the expenditure limits applicable to general election activity.¹⁵⁸

The Federal laws requiring public disclosure of campaign finances were intended to deter abuse and to educate the electorate. Because none of these laws created an institutional framework to administer the campaign finance provisions effectively and were otherwise flawed, the disclosure provisions were largely ignored.¹⁵⁹

The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (“FECA”) fundamentally changed the Federal campaign finance laws.¹⁶⁰ Among other things, FECA required full reporting of campaign contributions and expenditures. But like the earlier laws, FECA did not provide for one independent enforcement body. In the wake of documented campaign abuses in the 1972 presidential election, comprehensive amendments to FECA in 1974 resulted in the establishment of the Federal Election Commission (the “FEC”), an independent agency to assume the administrative functions under FECA and to serve as a clearinghouse for information on the administration of elections.¹⁶¹ In its ruling on a lawsuit filed by Senator James L. Buckley of New York and former Senator Eugene McCarthy to challenge the constitutionality of key provisions of the 1974 amendments to FECA, the Supreme Court ruled that some of the FECA expenditure limits and the method of appointing FEC commissioners were unconstitutional but upheld the FECA disclosure and recordkeeping requirements.¹⁶²

In response to the Supreme Court’s decision in Buckley v. Valeo, the Congress amended FECA in 1976 to repeal most of the expenditure limits and revise the provisions for the appointment of FEC Commissioners.¹⁶³ Additional amendments to FECA in 1979 simplified the reporting requirements.¹⁶⁴

FECA requires each treasurer of a political committee to sign and file reports of receipts and disbursements. During any calendar year in which there is a regularly scheduled election or nomination for election, a political committee that is the principal campaign committee of a congressional candidate is required to file a pre-election report, a post-election report, and additional quarterly reports. In any other calendar year, a congressional candidate’s committee is required to file semi-annual reports.¹⁶⁵ During any calendar year in which a general election is held, the principal campaign committee of a presidential candidate generally is required to file monthly reports if the committee receives contributions aggregating $100,000 or more or makes expenditures aggregating $100,000 or more, or anticipates receiving such contributions or making such expenditures. If a presidential candidate's principal campaign committee is not required to file monthly reports due to the level of actual or anticipated contributions and expenditures, the committee generally must file the same pre-election, post-election, and quarterly reports required for congressional candidates. In a calendar year in which a general election is not held, a presidential candidate's committee is required to file either monthly reports or quarterly reports.¹⁶⁶ Political committees other than authorized committees of a congressional or presidential candidate are required to file either monthly reports or pre-election, post-election, and quarterly reports.¹⁶⁷

The items that each report must disclose include the following:

- The total amount of all receipts and the total amount of all receipts in each of several categories, including contributions, transfers, and loans from committees, individuals, the candidate, and political party committees.
- The identification of contributors, transferors, and recipients of disbursements of more than $200.
- The total amount of all disbursements, and all disbursements in several categories, including expenditures made to meet candidate or committee operating expenses, transfers to other committees authorized by the same candidate, and loans and repayment of loans.
- The amount and nature of outstanding debts and obligations owed by or to such political committee; and where such debts and obligations are settled for less than their reported amount or value, a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which such debts or obligations were extinguished and the consideration therefor.¹⁶⁸

In addition to reports by political committees, FECA requires every person other than a political committee who makes independent expenditures in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $250 during a calendar year to file a statement that contains (1) the identity of the contributor, the date and the amount of all contributions received by such person, (2) the identity of the recipient of the independent expenditure, the date, amount, and purpose of the expenditure, and an indication of whether the independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, the candidate involved, (3) a certification whether or not such independent expenditure is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate, and (4) the identification of each person who made a contribution in excess of $200 to the person filing such statement which was made for the purpose of furthering an independent expenditure. Any independent expenditure aggregating $1,000 or more made after the 20th day, but more than 24 hours before any election must be reported within 24 hours after such independent expenditure is made. The statement concerning such an expenditure must contain the identity of the recipient of the independent expenditure, the date, amount, and purpose of the expenditure, and an indication of whether the independent expenditure is in support of, or in opposition to, the candidate involved. FECA requires the FEC to prepare indices that set forth, on a candidate-by-candidate basis, all independent expenditures separately made by or for each candidate and to periodically publishing such indices on a timely pre-election basis.¹⁶⁹

Since 1979, the FECA amendments and election reform measures adopted by the Congress have been limited in scope. The most significant developments in election reform have been judicial and administrative, especially as a result of FEC attempts to implement and enforce the applicable laws. As the agency responsible for administration and enforcement of FECA, the FEC provides disclosure of the campaign finance information it gathers pursuant to the FECA reporting and recordkeeping requirements. In a report commemorating its 20th anniversary, the FEC provided the following description of its disclosure responsibility:

Disclosing the sources and amounts of funds used to finance Federal elections is perhaps the most important of the FEC's duties. In fact, it would be virtually impossible for the Commission to effectively fulfill any of its other responsibilities without disclosure. The Commission could not, for example, enforce the law without knowledge of each committee's receipts and disbursements. Disclosure also helps citizens evaluate the candidates running for Federal office and it enables them, along with the agency, to monitor committee compliance with the election law. Given these facts, the Commission has devoted substantial resources to providing effective access to campaign finance data .¹⁷⁰

Since it was established in 1974, the FEC has disclosed campaign finance data and provided information on the election law to both the general public and regulated committees and persons in order to create an educated electorate and promote compliance with the campaign finance law. Both the FEC's public disclosure program and educational outreach efforts promote compliance by facilitating public scrutiny of campaign finance records and by fostering understanding of the law.¹⁷¹

¹⁶⁹ 2 U.S.C.S. 434(c).

¹⁷⁰ Federal Election Commission, Twenty Year Report 4 (1995).

¹⁷¹ Federal Election Commission, Annual Report 1998, p. 7.

When a committee files its report with the FEC, the Public Records Office ensures that a copy is available for public inspection within 48 hours. Simultaneously, the FEC's data staff begins to enter the information disclosed in the report into the FEC computer database. The amount of information disclosed has grown dramatically over the years. By December 1994, more than 12 million pages of information were available for public review. In the Public Records Office, citizens may inspect microfilm and paper copies of committee reports, as well as the FEC's computer database and more than 25 different computer indexes that make the data more accessible. For example, the "G Index" lists individuals who have given more than $200 to a committee during an election cycle. The "K Index" and the "L Index" offer broader "bank statement" views of receipts and disbursements for PACs, parties and candidates.¹⁷²

In recent years, computers have enhanced the disclosure process. FEC currently uses computer technology in virtually every aspect of the disclosure process, from electronic filing to distributing information over the Internet. In January 1997, the FEC established the first phase of an interim electronic filing program that allowed committees to file reports via computer disk. In 1998, the FEC launched the second phase of the program, permitting filers to submit reports to the FEC by modem and via the Internet.¹⁷³

The FEC creates digital images of all reports filed with the FEC by scanning the documents. The public may view these digital images in the FEC's Public Records Office or on the FEC's Internet web site. In addition to the digital imaging system, the FEC codes and enters information from campaign finance reports into the FEC's disclosure database, which contains data from 1977 to the present. Information is coded so that committees are identified consistently throughout the database.¹⁷⁴

In recent years, the FEC has significantly enhanced the availability of campaign finance data through its web site. One enhancement is a new query system that allows visitors to access the name and contribution amount of any individual who contributed $200 or more to a Federal political committee during the 1997-1998 election cycle. In addition, the query system allows users to access lists of PACs or party committees that contributed to specific candidates and to view lists of candidates to whom selected PACs and parties contributed. The system, which is updated daily, also allows users to access digitized copies of the actual reports filed by House candidates, PACs and party committees. The Public Records Office continues to make available microfilmed copies of all campaign finance reports, paper copies of reports from Congressional candidates and FEC documents such as press releases, audit reports, closed enforcement cases and agenda documents. The FEC also continues to offer on-line computer access to the disclosure database to more than 1,000 subscribers to the thirteen-year-old Direct Access Program for a

VI. JOINT COMMITTEE STAFF RECOMMENDATIONS TO INCREASE DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION RELATING TO TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

A. General Principles Relating to Disclosure of Returns and Return Information of Tax-Exempt Organizations

The Joint Committee staff believes that certain general principles should apply to disclosure of returns and return information relating to tax-exempt organizations. These general principles are described in this section. The Joint Committee staff applied these principles in developing its specific recommendations regarding modifications to the disclosure rules. These general principles also provide a framework for evaluating other proposals relating to disclosure rules for tax-exempt organizations.

The Joint Committee staff believes that, in general, the public has a legitimate interest in having access to all returns and return information regarding tax-exempt organizations. The Joint Committee staff also recognizes that there are legitimate concerns regarding the public disclosure of some information. In determining whether particular types of information should be subject to public disclosure, the public interest in disclosure should be balanced against the reasons for not disclosing the information. The Joint Committee staff believes that disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations is appropriate unless there are compelling reasons for nondisclosure that clearly outweigh the public interest in disclosure. The Joint Committee staff believes that, in order to help ensure the quality of information provided to the public regarding tax-exempt organizations, modifications to the present-law disclosure rules should be adopted only after interested parties have had opportunity to comment.

The Joint Committee staff believes that the public has a legitimate interest in access to information of tax-exempt organizations. This public interest derives from the tax benefits accorded under Federal law to such organizations, as well as the nature and purposes of such organizations. The public has an interest in ensuring that tax-exempt organizations are complying with applicable laws and that the funds of such organizations (whether or not solicited from the general public) are being used for the exempt purposes of the organization. The Joint Committee staff believes that increased disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations will improve the efficiency of the operation of the tax-exempt sector by: (1) increasing public oversight of tax-exempt organizations; (2) increasing compliance with Federal tax (and other applicable) laws; (3) promoting the fair application and administration of the Federal tax laws; and (4) advancing the policies underlying the Federal tax rules regarding such organizations, including the encouragement of charitable giving. Thus, the Joint Committee staff believes that the general principle governing disclosure of information regarding tax-exempt organizations is that such information should be disclosed unless there are compelling reasons for nondisclosure that clearly outweigh the public interest in disclosure.

In determining whether particular information regarding tax-exempt organizations should not be disclosed, the public interest in disclosure should be balanced against the reasons for nondisclosure. There may be a variety of factors relevant to this determination. For example, in some cases, information regarding a tax-exempt organization may involve return information of individuals, such as donors. In such a case, the privacy interests of the individual may outweigh the general public interest in the information. In other cases, disclosure of the information may be inconsistent with the objectives of disclosure. For example, in some circumstances, disclosure of information may be viewed as undermining voluntary compliance. In some cases, the administrative burdens on the organization may be unreasonable given the public benefit to be derived from disclosure. The Joint Committee staff believes that any proposed exceptions to the general principle of disclosure should be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether the exception is appropriate.

For example, the Joint Committee staff is not recommending disclosure of identity of specific donors (beyond those circumstances in which it is required under present law). The Joint Committee staff believes that donors have legitimate privacy concerns, and that disclosure of donor identity may reduce charitable giving. Such information generally is not relevant in determining whether the organization is complying with the law,¹⁷⁶ or in determining whether the organization is accomplishing its exempt purposes. Thus, the Joint Committee staff believes that the reasons for nondisclosure clearly outweigh any public interest in disclosure of such information.

The Joint Committee staff recommendations generally are applicable to all tax-exempt organizations described in section 501(c). However, it may be appropriate to consider whether such recommendations should apply only to a subset of such organizations, such as section 501(c)(3) organizations. Because the nature of the tax benefits conferred on an organization varies depending on the paragraph of section 501(c) in which the organization is described, it is appropriate to consider whether the need for information relating to an organization should also vary depending on the paragraph of section 501(c) under which the organization qualifies for tax-exempt status.

The benefits of disclosure can be achieved only if the information disclosed is relevant to those interested in the information, is understandable, is readily available, and is current. The Joint Committee staff believes that the quality of information provided to the general public regarding tax-exempt organizations will be enhanced if interested parties have an opportunity for input. In addition, input from interested parties, including tax-exempt organizations, is important in ensuring that the disclosure requirements do not impose undue burdens on tax-exempt organizations relative to the benefits obtained from disclosure.

In developing modifications to the present-law disclosure rules, a variety of factors should be taken into account. These include:

- the public interest served by disclosure of the information and the countervailing reasons for nondisclosure;
- whether the information is relevant to determining compliance with the law;
- whether disclosure of the information will increase or reduce voluntary compliance;
- whether and how disclosure of the information will modify the behavior of tax-exempt organizations and those associated with such organizations, including donors;
- privacy concerns of the organization and others;
- the costs involved in complying with disclosure requirements and whether the costs are reasonable given the benefit to be derived from disclosure of the information;
- whether the information should be disclosed by the IRS or the organization;
- whether the Federal tax laws should be used to collect the information;
- whether the information will be understandable to those with an interest in the information; and
- the extent to which the information is subject to misuse.

B. Disclosure of IRS Materials

1. Disclosure of written determinations

The Joint Committee staff recommends that all written determinations (and background file documents) involving tax-exempt organizations should be publicly disclosed. In general, the Joint Committee staff recommends that such disclosure be made without redactions.

The Joint Committee staff believes that present law creates an unintended and inappropriate result with respect to the release of written determinations relating to tax-exempt organizations. Although section 6104 is intended to provide for increased disclosure regarding tax-exempt organizations, present law results in the anomaly that, in some cases, there is greater disclosure of written determinations regarding taxable persons under section 6110 than there is of written determinations relating to tax-exempt organizations.¹⁷⁷ The Joint Committee staff recommends that this anomaly be corrected and that all written determinations (and background file documents) involving tax-exempt organizations be available to the public. The definition of written determination would be expanded to include all written legal interpretations that affect a member of the public and are issued by the IRS or the IRS Office of the Chief Counsel.¹⁷⁸

In general, disclosure of written determinations enables the public to obtain guidance as to the views of the IRS on particular issues and to determine whether the IRS is applying the law in a fair and consistent manner. In the case of tax-exempt organizations, disclosure of returns and return information serves an additional purpose--aiding in the public oversight of such organizations. In order for returns and return information to assist in such oversight, the information must be unredacted. Thus, in general, the Joint Committee staff recommends that written determinations relating to tax-exempt organizations should be publicly disclosed without redaction.¹⁷⁹ However, the Joint Committee staff also recognizes that certain exceptions to this general rule may be appropriate. The exemptions from disclosure contained in section 6110(c) (other than the provision that exempts identifying information of the tax-exempt organization)

¹⁷⁷ See the discussion in Part III.B.3., above.

¹⁷⁸ This definition is the same definition that the Joint Committee staff recommends applying to written determinations generally under section 6110. See Part Five, I.D., in Volume I of this study.

¹⁷⁹ Disclosure of rulings relating to the tax-exempt status of an organization may be described as an extension of the application process, so that such rulings, like rulings relating to tax-exempt status, should be disclosed.

provide a guide as to the type of information that it may be appropriate to redact.¹⁸⁰ The Joint Committee staff recommends that procedures similar to those under section 6110(f) apply with respect to the redaction process.

In general, the Joint Committee staff recommends that disclosure of written determinations pursuant to this recommendation should be made at the time provided under section 6110.¹⁸¹ As one exception to this general rule, the Joint Committee staff recommends that written determinations issued during the audit and examination process should be subject to special rules in order to avoid disruption of the audit process. For example, if a technical advice memorandum is requested with respect to an issue under audit, public disclosure of that memorandum in unredacted form affects the willingness of the IRS or the organization to resolve the issue and may prolong the audit. Thus, the Joint Committee staff recommends that written determinations relating to exempt organizations issued before the conclusion of the administrative examination process¹⁸² should be disclosed as provided under section 6110 (i.e., redacted). Once the examination process is completed, the Joint Committee staff recommends that such rulings should be disclosed publicly in unredacted form.

2. Disclosure of audit results and closing agreements

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS disclose the results of audits of tax-exempt organizations. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that all closing agreements with tax-exempt organizations should be disclosed. In general, the Joint Committee staff recommends that such disclosures should be made without redaction.

Present law does not provide for the disclosure of information relating to the audit of a tax-exempt organization. Similarly, closing agreements (whether or not the result of an audit) are generally not subject to disclosure; however, in some cases, the IRS has required that a closing agreement be made public as part of the agreement.¹⁸³ Information regarding the outcome of an audit would assist the public in determining whether the organization is in compliance with the law and how the organization is using funds. Closing agreements not only contain information regarding the past conduct of an organization, but also typically set forth requirements governing the future conduct of an organization in order to make sure that the organization remains in compliance with the law. Because such information is not disclosable under present law (unless disclosure is agreed to as part of a closing agreement), the public is denied access to key information regarding the activities of tax-exempt organizations and the IRS actions with respect to those activities. In order to enable the public to have access to such information, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS disclose the documents reflecting the results of an audit at the conclusion of the administrative examination process (i.e., after the audit is closed and the time for filing an administrative appeal has expired).¹⁸⁴ Similarly, the Joint Committee staff recommends that closing agreements should be disclosed (regardless of whether the agreement arose as a result of an audit).¹⁸⁵ Such information would generally be unredacted; redactions would be made only as provided under the recommendations relating to disclosure of written determinations.¹⁸⁶

¹⁸¹ The recommendation would not modify the timing of disclosure of documents made under section 6104 under present law.

Some commentators have expressed the view that disclosure of closing agreements will deter tax-exempt organizations from voluntarily coming to the IRS regarding possible or actual violations of the law. Similarly, it is argued that some tax-exempt organizations may be unwilling ¹⁸³ In the case of tax-exempt organizations, the IRS has required disclosure of two closing agreements, one in 1994 relating to Hermann Hospital and the recently-approved closing agreement regarding the Estate of Bernice Bishop (the “Bishop Estate”). In the latter case, the agreement was required to be made available to the public at the Bishop Estate’s office and on its site on the World Wide Web. Public comments by IRS officials indicate that the IRS viewed the disclosure of these closing agreements as a way to provide guidance to tax-exempt organizations regarding transactions which may be subject to sanctions.

¹⁸⁵ It is intended that the disclosure include any documents referred to in the agreement.

¹⁸⁶ The Joint Committee staff believes that public disclosure of closing agreements with tax-exempt organizations will assist in the public oversight of such organizations. In general, the Joint Committee staff does not believe that closing agreements are an effective means to provide guidance to taxpayers regarding the law. Such agreements are negotiated, and may not represent the IRS view of the law. Further, because such agreements may be fact specific and may not contain all relevant information, they may be misleading if relied upon by others. For these reasons, the Joint Committee staff does not include in its general disclosure recommendations in Volume I of this study a recommendation that closing agreements not involving tax-exempt organizations be disclosed.

to enter into a closing agreement or otherwise settle an audit with the IRS if the organization knows that the information will become public. It is also argued that publication of such information will lengthen the audit process, as both sides will negotiate with a view toward what information will ultimately be made public.

The Joint Committee staff does not believe that these concerns outweigh the public's interest in disclosure. As discussed in greater detail in Part V., above, because of the tax benefits provided to tax-exempt organizations and the nature of such organizations, their activities and operations are subject to public scrutiny. This scrutiny extends to possibly negative activities as well as positive achievements of the organization. For example, if a tax-exempt organization has engaged in activities that result in an adjustment on audit or if a tax-exempt organization enters into a closing agreement requiring a change in its operations in order to retain tax-exempt status, the public has a right to know such information.

The Joint Committee staff does not believe that requiring disclosure of such information will unduly impede the settlement process. There are a variety of reasons why both the IRS and a tax-exempt organization may wish to settle a matter that are independent of whether the activity will be disclosed. These include the costs of litigation, as well as the likelihood of ultimate success on the merits. Further, if a tax-exempt organization chooses not to settle a matter, the only option will be litigation, which also will result in public disclosure. With respect to the effect of disclosure on voluntary compliance, the Joint Committee staff notes that it would be inconsistent with an organization's exempt purposes and fiduciary responsibilities to continue to engage in activity that violates the law. Thus, tax-exempt organizations should continue to have an interest in voluntary compliance and correction of inappropriate activity regardless of whether such activity is disclosed publicly.

3. Disclosure of applications for tax-exempt status

The Joint Committee staff recommends that applications for tax-exempt status (and supporting documents) should be disclosed when the application is made. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that any action taken on the application be disclosed.

Under present law, applications for recognition of tax-exempt status (and supporting documents) are subject to disclosure only after the organization is determined, on the basis of the application, to be exempt from tax for any taxable year. If the organization is determined to be exempt for any year, such information is not withheld from disclosure on the ground that the organization is determined not to be exempt for any other taxable year.¹⁸⁷

While most applications for tax-exempt status are acted upon promptly, processing times vary and, in some cases, may span years. While an application for tax-exempt status is pending, an organization may be in operation and the public may believe the organization is tax exempt and, in the case of purported section 501(c)(3) organizations, incorrectly assume that donations to the organization are tax deductible. However, during this time, present law limits the information available. The application for exemption contains information of interest to the public regarding the exempt purposes of the organization. In the case of an organization that is already exempt but that is changing its operations, a new application for exemption will similarly provide guidance as to what the new purposes of the organization will be. Thus, the Joint Committee staff recommends that applications for tax-exempt status (and supporting documents) should be disclosed while pending, and not only after a favorable determination is made. The Joint Committee staff also recommends that any action taken with respect to the application, e.g., denial or withdrawal of the application, should be disclosed.

4. Disclosure of third-party communications

The Joint Committee staff recommends that rules similar to the disclosure rules that apply to third-party communications under section 6110 should be applied to third-party communications relating to written determinations and exemption applications subject to disclosure under section 6104.

Section 6104 provides generally that applications for exemption and supporting documents are subject to public disclosure. IRS regulations provide that supporting documents do not include documents submitted by persons other than the organization.¹⁸⁸ Thus, third-party communications regarding exemption applications are not disclosable under section 6104.

In contrast, section 6110 provides that communications (written or otherwise) between the IRS and persons outside the IRS in connection with a written determination are generally subject to disclosure.¹⁸⁹ If the IRS receives a communication regarding a written determination before the issuance of the determination, the IRS is required to indicate on the written determination open to public inspection the category of the person making the communication and the date of the communication.¹⁹⁰

¹⁸⁸ Treas. reg. sec. 301.6104-(a)(1)(e). These regulations have been upheld in court. Lehrfeld v. Commissioner, 132 F.2d 1463 (D.C. Cir. 1998).

¹⁹⁰ Sec. 6110(d). Treasury regulations provide the following as examples of categories of persons: Congressional, Department of Commerce, Department of Treasury, trade association, White House, and educational institution. Treas. reg. sec. 301.6110-4(a). Section 6110 also provides that, in cases in which third-party communications have been received, disclosure of the identity of the person to whom the written determination was made can be compelled if there is evidence that impropriety occurred by or on behalf of such person. Sec. 6110(d)(2).

Present law results in an anomaly in that there is greater disclosure of third-party communications with respect to written determinations pertaining to taxable persons under section 6110 than with respect to tax-exempt organizations under section 6104. The Joint Committee staff believes that this discrepancy should be eliminated, and that rules similar to the rules regarding disclosure of third-party communications under section 6110 should apply under section 6104.¹⁹¹ These rules would apply to all third party communications in connection with exemption requests and other written determinations involving tax-exempt organizations. The same rules regarding redactions would apply as recommended with respect to disclosure of written determinations, audit results, and closing agreements.

5. Confidentiality of taxpayer identification number

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the taxpayer identification number of tax-exempt organizations should not be subject to disclosure.

The taxpayer identification number (“TIN”) of tax-exempt organizations is (like that of individual and other taxpayers) subject to misuse and is not necessary in order for the public to identify an organization. While the TIN of a tax-exempt organization is disclosed under present law because it is included on the Form 990, the Joint Committee staff believes that the potential for misuse may be increased given the additional disclosures recommended in this study. Thus, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the TIN of a tax-exempt organization not be disclosed (on the Form 990 or any other document required to be disclosed).

¹⁹¹ The proposal would not affect the extent to which third-party communications may be disclosable under the FOIA.

C. Recommendations Regarding Form 990 and Related Forms

1. Background

As discussed in Part III.A.,5., above, tax-exempt organizations generally are required to file an annual information return, Form 990, “Return of Organization Exempt From Income Tax,” with the IRS.¹⁹² Form 990 is the most important and most universal source of public information about the finances and activities of tax-exempt organizations. Over the years, the amount of information requested on the Form 990 has increased, as have the penalties for failure to file and accurately complete the returns.

For many years, the Form 990 was used almost exclusively by the IRS. Over the last 20 years, the Form 990 has evolved into the primary disclosure form for both the IRS and State charity officials. Prior to the 1980s, most States required that a separate report be filed with State charity offices responsible for monitoring the activities of tax-exempt organizations within their jurisdictions. In the early 1980s, representatives of the Treasury Department, the IRS, and representatives from groups representing State attorneys general and other State charity officials began to work together to develop uniform charitable reporting requirements so that the Form 990 could be used by both Federal and State reporting purposes.¹⁹³ Most States that require annual financial reporting now accept the Form 990 as the basic annual report, although some require supplementary information be filed as well. This effort to develop uniform reporting requirements has been well-received, particularly by those tax-exempt organizations that solicit funds in many States and that previously had to prepare and file multiple forms.

Form 990 now serves multiple purposes and provides information to others in addition to the IRS and State charity officials. Those who use Form 990 include: donors and potential donors, the public, the press, researchers, so-called “watchdog” organizations that scrutinize the activities of tax-exempt organizations, and the tax-exempt sector itself.¹⁹⁴ In order to meet the needs of those interested in tax-exempt organizations, relevant information must be readily accessible in a timely manner, and in a form that is readily understandable.

¹⁹² Private foundations, which are a subcategory of section 501(c)(3) charitable organizations, file a somewhat different annual information return with the IRS, Form 990-PF, “Return of Private Foundation or Section 4947(a)(1) Nonexempt Charitable Trust Treated as a Private Foundation.” The objective of both Form 990 and Form 990-PF is the same: to provide the IRS and other interested parties that use the form with information about the finances and activities of tax-exempt organizations.

¹⁹⁴ Id. at 441.

Recent changes in the law have been designed to make Form 990 more readily available. In the past, a tax-exempt organization was required to make a copy of Form 990 available for public inspection only if someone visited its offices. In 1996, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2 added a requirement that any tax-exempt organization (other than a private foundation) that files a Form 990 is required to comply with requests made in writing or in person from individuals seeking a copy of the organization's Form 990 (for the three most recent taxable years) or application for tax-exempt status and supporting documents. If the request is made in person, the copies must be provided "immediately." If the request is made in writing, the copies must be provided within 30 days. Copies must be provided without charge other than a reasonable fee for any reproduction and mailing costs. Organizations may comply with this requirement by making copies "widely available."¹⁹⁵ Because these rules went into effect in June 1999, the extent to which they are effective in providing easier access to Forms 990 and exemption applications is not fully known. However, early responses indicate that disclosure has been advanced. For example, many Form 990's are now being posted on the World Wide Web.

In general, comments received by the Joint Committee staff indicate that the current Form 990 provides considerable relevant information regarding the activities of tax-exempt organizations. However, some have commented that the Form may not be understandable to the general public and may not include all information in which the public has an interest. As discussed in Part V., above, the information needs of persons other than the IRS may not in all cases correspond with the information needs of the IRS. For example, donors and potential donors may be interested in information regarding how well an organization accomplishes its exempt purposes that may not be relevant to whether the organization is complying with the Federal tax laws. While Form 990 provides significant amounts of information, there may be additional information not contained in the current form that is relevant to the public in order to oversee the tax-exempt sector, and there may be ways to provide the information on Form 990 that will better facilitate its use by the general public as well as the IRS.

In addition, under present law, certain returns filed by tax-exempt organizations (e.g., Form 990-T (Exempt Organization Business Income Tax Return), Form 1120 (U.S. Corporation Income Tax Return) filed with respect to subsidiaries, and Form 1120-POL (U.S. Income Tax Return for Certain Political Organizations) are not required to be disclosed. As a result, the public may be getting an incomplete picture of the activities of tax-exempt organizations.

In keeping with the general principle that information regarding tax-exempt organizations should be publicly available, the Joint Committee staff believes that the quality and quantity of information provided on the Form 990 (and related Forms) can be improved so that the public interest in disclosure can be better served.

¹⁹⁵ In 1998, these expanded disclosure rules were extended to private foundation annual returns and applications for exemption. Final regulations on the new provisions were issued on January 13, 2000, and will apply to private foundations whose annual information returns are due on or after March 13, 2000. See Treas. reg. secs. 301.6104(d)-1,-2,-3.

2. Recommendations

a. Acceleration of electronic filing and general revisions to Form 990

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the Form 990 and related forms: (1) should be accepted by the IRS for electronic filing for returns filed after 2002; and (2) should be revised to ensure that the forms provide relevant and comprehensible information to the public as well as the IRS.¹⁹⁶

Tax-exempt organizations should be permitted to file the Form 990 electronically as soon as possible.¹⁹⁷ Accelerating the acceptance of electronic filing will promote the goal of greater public disclosure. Electronic filing of Form 990 will facilitate the posting of the forms on the IRS site on the World Wide Web, which will make more information available more quickly to the general public. A number of people and groups commented to the Joint Committee staff that electronic access to Forms 990 is key to meaningful public disclosure.

Accelerating availability of electronic filing will have other benefits as well. For example, some States that use the Form 990 to satisfy State-law reporting requirements are starting to require electronic filing of the form with the State. In the absence of a Federal program of electronic filing, tax-exempt organizations could be subject to a variety of different electronic filing regimes, which could be both inefficient and burdensome on those tax-exempt organizations required to file in multiple States. In addition, many tax-exempt organizations currently prepare all or most of their Form 990 on a computer; additional tax-exempt organizations are expected to begin to do so in the next few years. It is inefficient for both the tax-exempt organizations and the IRS for these forms to be prepared electronically and a copy be mailed to the IRS, which in turn enters data from these forms into its computers. Also, this current process may more easily lead to transcription errors, which can be avoided by electronic filing.

As part of the process of preparing for electronic filing, Form 990 will need to be reviewed and changes to the form will of necessity occur. The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS also review and revise the form as appropriate with a view to ensuring that it is useful and understandable to the general public, as well as the IRS. That is, the form should reflect the different role it plays compared to other tax forms.

There are a number of constituencies interested in the content of most tax forms: the IRS (as recipient of the completed form); the taxpayers who must fill out the forms; and other parties (such as States) that may make use of some or all of the information on the form (as permitted by the Code). With respect to the Form 990, however, there is an additional constituency: the general public. Accordingly, these forms must be designed with the general public (in their role as overseers of the tax-exempt sector) in mind. The IRS may need a different perspective when designing the Form 990 than it does when designing tax forms that are not publicly disclosed. The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS review the Form 990 and all related forms from the perspective of ultimate public disclosure, so that the information is presented in a way that is useful not only to the IRS but also to the public. The Joint Committee staff believes that this can best be accomplished if the IRS consults with other parties who also are interested in facilitating comprehensive and comprehensible disclosure. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS consult with State officials who use Form 990 as a substitute for a specialized State form.

¹⁹⁷ The IRS currently projects that it will be able to accept electronic filing of Form 990 in fiscal year 2007.

The recommendation that the IRS review and revise the form as appropriate with a view to ensuring that it is useful and understandable to the general public, as well as the IRS, means that the IRS should consider suggestions to accomplish these purposes that have been made by interested observers. For example, some have suggested that the form might be more understandable if it were accompanied by a short summary containing the information that may be of greatest interest to the public. Others have suggested that Part III of the Form 990, Statement of Program Service Accomplishments, should be revised to elicit more comprehensive evaluations of the organization's accomplishments. The IRS should consider comments such as these that have already been made, as well as solicit new comments, as part of its process of reviewing and revising the form.

The Joint Committee staff does not recommend that the filing threshold for the Form 990-EZ should be increased. Under present law, organizations can file the Form 990-EZ if the organization's gross receipts are more than $25,000 but less than $100,000, and the organization has total assets of less than $250,000 at the end of its taxable year. The cap of $100,000 of gross receipts was set in 1989, when the Form 990-EZ was introduced. Several commentators suggested that, since it has been a number of years since this filing cap was established, it is now appropriate to raise the cap. There are a number of competing concerns that must be considered in evaluating this proposal. The Joint Committee staff considered carefully both the costs of raising the cap as well as the benefits of raising the cap. The most significant cost of raising the cap would be the loss of detailed information that is currently disclosed by organizations filing the full Form 990 but that would not be disclosed by those same organizations if they are permitted to file the more abbreviated Form 990-EZ. This loss of information could be important to the IRS, the States, or to the general public. This loss would violate the general policy recommendation of the Joint Committee staff that there should be broad disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. On the other hand, a benefit from raising the cap could be a reduction in the overall administrative burdens on both the tax-exempt organizations that would become eligible to file the Form 990-EZ and on the IRS (in that it would have less information to process). The Joint Committee staff believes that the loss of detailed information with respect to tax-exempt organizations that would become eligible to file the Form 990-EZ outweighs the benefit from potential reductions in administrative burdens.

The Joint Committee staff does not recommend raising the threshold below which no return at all need be filed. Several commentators suggested that increasing the no-filing threshold would eliminate the burden of filing these forms on tax-exempt organizations. The Joint Committee staff believes that eliminating entirely the filing of tax returns by these organizations would violate the general policy recommendation that there should be broad disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. Eliminating the burden of filing on tax-exempt organizations that are currently required to file the Form 990-EZ does not outweigh this general policy recommendation. There is value to both the IRS and to the general public of continuing the requirement that tax-exempt organizations with gross receipts above $25,000 continue to file the Form 990-EZ.

b. Disclosure of Forms 990-T and annual returns filed by affiliated organizations

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the scope of section 6104 should be expanded to require the disclosure of all Forms 990-T and any forms (including Forms 1120 and 1065) filed by affiliated organizations of tax-exempt organizations.

This recommendation flows from the general policy recommendation of the Joint Committee staff that there should be broad disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. Disclosure of the taxable activities of tax-exempt organizations will facilitate comprehensive oversight by the public of the full range of activities by tax-exempt organizations. More specifically, disclosure regarding taxable entities that are affiliated with tax-exempt organizations would be beneficial in clarifying the relationship between the two types of organizations. Tax-exempt organizations may have a variety of reasons for having relationships with affiliated taxable organizations. In some instances, the relationship between the taxable and the tax-exempt organizations may be clear within both organizations as well as to the public. In other instances, the relationship may not be clear. The disclosure of Forms 990-T and Forms 1120¹⁹⁸ (or other returns) filed by affiliated organizations of tax-exempt entities will make these relationships clear as well as provide a complete picture of the entire range of activities conducted by both the tax-exempt organization and its taxable affiliates. There may be several alternative means of implementing this recommendation. For example, it may be possible to fold the information required by the Form 990-T into the Form 990 and eliminate the Form 990-T. Alternatively, the Form 990-T could be revised to accommodate public disclosure. If this alternative is pursued, one necessary revision would be to ensure that information exempt from disclosure under section 6104 (such as trade secrets) is not reported on the Form 990-T.

¹⁹⁸ Under present law, tax-exempt organizations with taxable affiliates may structure the relationship between the organizations so that the taxable affiliate reports to the IRS on either a Form 990-T or on a Form 1120 (the general corporate income tax return).

c. Disclosure and revision of Form 1120-POL

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the scope of section 6104 should be expanded to require the disclosure of the annual return filed by political organizations described in section 527.

The Joint Committee staff also recommends that section 527 organizations should be required to file an annual return even if such organizations do not have taxable income and that the annual return be revised to include more information concerning the activities of such organizations.

Tax-exempt organizations described in section 501(c), other than those described in section 501(c)(3), generally are permitted to engaged in limited political campaign activities, as long as such activities are not the primary activities of the organization.

Organizations whose primary purpose is to directly or indirectly accept contributions and make expenditures to influence or attempt to influence the selection, nomination, election, or appointment of any individual to any Federal, State, or local public office or the election of Presidential or Vice-Presidential electors are eligible for a limited tax-exempt status under section 527 (e.g., as a PAC). Section 527 exempts from taxation certain exempt function income (i.e., contributions, dues, proceeds from political fundraisers or the sale of campaign materials, and proceeds from bingo games) to the extent such income is segregated for use only for an exempt function of the political organization. However, a political organization's investment income and any nonexempt function income (e.g., income from events that are not political in nature), minus expenses directly connected with the production of such income, is subject to tax at the highest corporate income tax rate (i.e., 35 percent).

Even though a section 501(c) organization (other than a section 501(c)(3) organization) may engage in limited political campaign activity, such activities nonetheless will result in the organization being subject to tax under section 527(f) on the lesser of its investment income or the amount expended on political activities. However, such an organization may establish a separate segregated fund, which may be treated as a separate organization under section 527(f)(3). In that case, the expenditures and investment income of the separate segregated fund will not be attributed to the sponsoring organization.

Non-section 501(c)(3) organizations are required to provide annual information disclosure to members (sometimes referred to as "flow-through information disclosure") estimating the portion of such members' dues allocable to political campaign activities, as well as any lobbying activities. Such disclosure is not required for an organization that: (1) incurs only a de minimis amount (i.e., $2,000 or less) of in-house political campaign and lobbying expenditures during the taxable year; (2) elects to pay a 35-percent proxy tax on its political campaign and lobbying expenditures incurred during the taxable year rather than providing flow-through information disclosure to its members; or (3) establishes pursuant to Treasury Department rules that substantially all of its dues monies are paid by members not entitled to deduct such dues in computing their taxable income.

A non-section 501(c)(3) organization also is required to file Form 1120-POL (U.S. Income Tax Return for Certain Political Organizations) if the organization's political expenditures and net investment income both exceed $100 for the year. If a non-section 501(c)(3) organization establishes and maintains a section 527(f)(3) separate segregated fund, the fund is required to file Form 1120-POL. Section 527 political organizations are not required to apply for tax-exempt status and are not required to file Form 990. If the section 527 political organization has taxable income, it is required to file Form 1120-POL; similarly, if the political organization does not have taxable income, the Form 1120-POL is not required to be filed. The Form 1120-POL is not publicly disclosable under present law.

Furthermore, although some section 527 political organizations are subject to disclosure requirements under the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, other such organizations are outside the reach of the disclosure requirements under the Federal elections laws.¹⁹⁹

Although section 527 political organizations are accorded less favorable tax treatment than organizations described in section 501(c), section 527 political organizations nonetheless receive favorable tax treatment because they are required to pay tax only on their investment income. Some would contend that, because these organizations generally are not-for-profit organizations (i.e., the purpose of the organization is not to make a profit, but rather to serve as a conduit for the receipt of contributions to fund a political campaign), the tax treatment of such organizations is not favorable and merely recognizes the reality of the arrangement. However, the fact that a section 527 political organization is not required to pay tax on political campaign contributions in excess of expenses does provide a tax benefit that is not available to a fully taxable entity.²⁰⁰

The Joint Committee staff believes that it is appropriate to require section 527 political organizations to disclose information relating to their activities to the public under the rules of section 6104. The Joint Committee staff believes that the special status accorded to section 527 political organizations under present law justifies this disclosure. The Joint Committee staff believes it is in the public's interest to receive information concerning the activities of such organizations, particularly because the Federal election law disclosure requirements do not apply to some section 527 political organizations.

This recommendation is consistent with the recommendation that all tax returns relating to tax-exempt organizations should be disclosable. In addition, the Form 1120-POL of a separate segregated fund should be disclosable by the tax-exempt organization establishing the fund.

¹⁹⁹ See Frances R. Hill, Probing the Limits of Section 527 to Design a New Campaign Finance Vehicle, Tax Notes, January 17, 2000, at 387.

²⁰⁰ See Part IV., above, for a discussion of the benefits of tax-exempt status.

The Joint Committee staff also recommends that section 527 political organizations should be required to file an annual return even if the organizations do not have taxable income and that the annual return should be expanded to include more information regarding the activities of the organization. For example, the form could include general categories for sources of funds received. The Joint Committee staff believes that this information would be of interest to the public and would not unduly burden such organizations.

d. Disclosure of name under which organization does business

The Joint Committee staff recommends that tax-exempt organizations should be required to provide both their legal name and the name under which they do business on the Form 990.

Some tax-exempt organizations do business and solicit contributions under a name that is different from the organization's legal name. This can cause confusion to individuals and others seeking information about the organization. Accordingly, the Joint Committee staff recommends that, if an organization does business under a name different from its legal name, both names be disclosed on the Form 990. In addition, the IRS should publish both names it receives on any Form 990 in IRS Publication 78.²⁰¹

e. IRS notification regarding availability of Form 990

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS notify taxpayers in instructions and publications that Form 990 is publicly available.

The information provided on Forms 990 is useful to the public only if the public is aware that the form is publicly available. Currently, there are a number of ways members of the public can become aware of the availability of Forms 990. For example, those who work in or with the tax-exempt sector and large donors are likely to be aware of the form and the fact that it is publicly available. State charities officials and organizations that endeavor to educate the public about charities, charitable giving, and avoiding fraud provide information regarding Forms 990 and how to obtain them. The Joint Committee staff believes that the availability of Forms 990 would be increased by requiring the IRS to educate the public regarding the availability of the form. Thus, the Joint Committee recommends that the IRS should be required to notify the public that the form is publicly available. This notification could be provided in the instructions to Schedule A of the Form 1040 as part of the instructions relating to charitable contributions. It also could be provided in general publications, such as Publication 17,²⁰² and publications more specifically relating to charitable contributions, such as Publication 526.²⁰³

f. Disclosure of World Wide Web site address

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the World Wide Web site, if any, of a tax-exempt organization should be included on Form 990 and that the IRS should be required to publish such addresses.

One method of increasing public access to information regarding tax-exempt organizations is to facilitate the ability of the public to locate the World Wide Web sites of tax-exempt organizations. One way to do this is to require that the World Wide Web site, if any, of the tax-exempt organization be provided as part of the address of the organization on the Form 990. Thus, the World Wide Web site of the organization would be made readily accessible to anyone examining the organization's Form 990. Another way to facilitate the ability of the public to locate the World Wide Web sites of tax-exempt organizations is for the IRS to publish the World Wide Web sites it receives on Form 990 in IRS Publication 78.²⁰⁴

g. Affiliated organizations

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the Form 990 report more information concerning the transfer of funds among various organizations so that the public and the IRS can better assess whether contributions to tax-exempt organizations are being used to fund political activities.

The fact that certain section 501(c) organizations (such as section 501(c)(4) social welfare organizations) may engage in limited political campaign activities means that such organizations can establish and support a section 527 political organization. Under some circumstances, a section 501(c)(3) organization may be affiliated with a section 501(c)(4) organization, which in turn is affiliated with a section 527 political organization (a "conduit arrangement").

The Joint Committee staff believes that the IRS and the public have a strong interest in monitoring the extent to which tax-exempt organizations are engaged in or helping to finance political campaign activities. Thus, the Joint Committee staff believes that the Form 990 should be revised to require tax-exempt organizations to identify clearly conduit arrangements in which funds are being transferred among section 501(c)(3), 501(c)(4), and 527 organizations. The information currently reported on the Form 990 requires disclosure only of transfers to affiliated organizations and permits tax-exempt organizations to establish complex arrangements that may be used to circumvent the present-law restrictions on political campaign activities. More complete disclosure of the types of relationships and transfers taking place among various tax-exempt organizations will help the IRS and the public understand how contributions to tax-exempt organizations are being used.

h. Notification requirement for entities not currently required to file

The Joint Committee staff recommends that tax-exempt entities (other than churches) that are below the filing threshold for the Form 990-EZ should be required to file annually a brief notification of their status with the IRS.

Under present law, an organization whose annual gross receipts are normally $25,000 or less is generally not required to file a Form 990 or a Form 990-EZ with the IRS. The lack of a filing requirement makes it difficult for the IRS or the public to obtain even basic information regarding an organization, such as the organization's current address or whether it has terminated its existence. Accordingly, the Joint Committee staff recommends that tax-exempt organizations (other than churches) that are below the filing threshold for the Form 990-EZ should be required to file annually a notification of their status with the IRS. The notification would include the organization's legal name, the name under which it does business, its mailing address, its web site address (if any), its taxpayer identification number, and the name and address of a principal officer. If the organization terminates its existence, a similar termination status report would be required at that point. All filings pursuant to this provision would be publicly released, as are the Forms 990 and 990-EZ.

In developing this recommendation, the Joint Committee staff considered whether the threshold for filing Form 990-EZ should be lowered. Lowering the threshold would enable the public to obtain more information regarding tax-exempt organizations. However, as indicated above, the public's interest in information must in some cases be balanced with other factors. In this case, there is concern that imposing additional requirements on tax-exempt organizations not currently required to file any information with the IRS would unduly burden the organization. The Joint Committee staff recommendation reflects both the needs of the public and the IRS in obtaining basic information regarding an on going tax-exempt organization and concerns of the organization that it not be unduly burdened.

i. Modification to capital gains and losses reporting on Form 990-PF

The Joint Committee staff recommends that private foundations reporting capital gains and losses on Form 990-PF should be permitted to disclose a summary of those capital transactions. A full listing of the transactions would be required to be filed with the IRS and to be provided to the public upon request.

Under present law, private foundations with capital transactions must report each transaction on Form 990-PF, as filed with the IRS and as released to the public.²⁰⁵ For some of these entities, the listing of these transactions can involve hundreds of pages. Disclosure of such voluminous information does not necessarily benefit the public, and may in fact reduce the level of meaningful disclosure by obscuring other important information. Accordingly, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the version of the 990-PF that is automatically released to the public pursuant to section 6104 include a summary page of all capital transactions. The detailed list would still be required to be provided to the IRS and to members of the public who explicitly request the detailed information and pay the customary copying fees.

j. Preparer penalties

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the present-law tax penalty imposed on tax return preparers should be expanded to apply to any omission or misrepresentation on a Form 990 that either was known or reasonably should have been known to the preparer.

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the present-law tax penalty imposed on tax return preparers should be expanded to apply to willful or reckless misrepresentation or disregard of rules and regulations with respect to Form 990.

Under present law,²⁰⁶ return preparers are subject to a penalty of $250 with respect to any return if a portion of an understatement of tax liability is due to a position for which there was not a realistic possibility of success on the merits, the preparer knew or reasonably should have known of the position, and the position was not disclosed or was frivolous. In addition, present law²⁰⁷ imposes a penalty on return preparers of $1,000 with respect to a tax return if a portion of an understatement of tax liability is due to a willful attempt to understate liability or to reckless or intentional disregard of rules or regulations. While these penalties technically apply to Forms 990, in practice they have little effect, because in general no understatement of tax is involved in the filing of a Form 990.

²⁰⁵ Different reporting rules apply to tax-exempt organizations required to file Form 990 and Form 990-EZ. With respect to publicly traded securities, these organizations are required to provide “lump sum figures in place of ...detailed reporting...”. 1998 Form 990 Instructions for lines 8a through 8d (page 16).

Preparer penalties are designed to provide an incentive to the preparer to ensure the accuracy of the return. One of the concerns raised with current filings of Form 990 is lack of accuracy. Imposing meaningful preparer penalties with respect to Form 990 will help to increase the accuracy of Form 990 filings.

Accordingly, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the present-law return preparer penalty should be expanded (with modifications) to apply to any omission or misrepresentation on a Form 990²⁰⁸ that either was known or reasonably should have been known to the preparer, other than minor, inadvertent omissions. The penalty would apply to the preparer without regard to the requirement of present law that there be an understatement, provided that the other conditions for imposition of the penalty are met. The Joint Committee staff also recommends that the amount of the penalty should be increased from $250 to the greater of $250 or 50 percent of the return preparer's fee. This is to create parity between this new penalty and the Joint Committee staff's recommendation with respect to the general return preparer's penalty contained in the Joint Committee staff's study of penalties and interest.²⁰⁹

In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the present-law return preparer penalty for willful or reckless acts should be expanded (with modifications) to apply to willful or reckless misrepresentation or disregard of rules and regulations with respect to Form 990.²¹⁰ The penalty would apply to the preparer without regard to the requirement of present law that there be an understatement, provided that the other conditions for imposition of the penalty are met. The Joint Committee staff recommends that the amount of the penalty should be increased from $1,000 to the greater of $1,000 or 100 percent of the return preparer's fee. This is to create parity between this new penalty and the Joint Committee staff's recommendation with respect to the

D. Expand Disclosure of Returns and return information of Tax-Exempt Organizations to Nontax State Officials or Agencies

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS should be permitted to disclose to Attorneys General and other nontax State officials or agencies audit and examination information concerning tax-exempt organizations with respect to whom the State officials have jurisdiction and have made a specific referral of such organization to the IRS prior to a final determination with respect to the denial or revocation of tax exemption. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS should be permitted to share audit and examination information concerning tax-exempt organizations with nontax State officials and agencies with jurisdiction over the activities of such organizations and who regularly share information with the IRS when the IRS determines that such disclosure may facilitate the resolution of cases.

Background and present law

State officials have considerable responsibility and authority with respect to nonprofit or charitable organizations. State tax officials generally have the responsibility of ensuring that such organizations are in compliance with State tax laws regarding such organizations. The interest of such State officials is similar to the interest of the IRS in enforcing the Federal tax laws.

In addition, States have a variety of nontax laws that govern nonprofit organizations and their fund raisers. Some of these laws may be similar to the Federal tax rules relating to tax-exempt organizations, but often go beyond tax requirements.²¹² Such laws typically include laws regarding registration, disclosure, fiduciary duties of organization officers, directors, and others, the prohibition of specific types of self-dealing transactions, fraud, use of solicited funds and other assets of charitable organizations, and fund raising. Such nontax laws are enforced by the State charity official, typically the State Attorney General. State charity officials are often charged not only with enforcing specific laws regarding charitable organizations, but generally with protecting the public interest with respect to such organizations.²¹³ Activities of State charity officials may include investigations of charitable organizations, their principals, and fund raisers for compliance with State laws, the initiation of legal actions, and the overseeing of nonprofit activities generally (including business transactions such as mergers, conversions from or to nonprofit status, and acquisitions). The sanctions that may be invoked by State charity officials include loss of nonprofit or tax-exempt status, revocation of the organization's charter, civil and criminal penalties, and equitable remedies.

In order to help protect individuals against fraudulent activities or unscrupulous practices, many State charity officials make substantial information regarding nonprofit organizations available to the general public. Such information may include specific information about locally-based charities and national charities that operate within the State, as well as general consumer protection information, such as how to deal with fund raisers (e.g., telemarketers) and what information to request from nonprofit organizations. Many State Attorney General offices have sites on the World Wide Web that contain such information, as well as links to other sites that provide additional information regarding specific charities and general information on charitable giving.

Many State charity officials also make information regarding State laws readily available to tax-exempt organizations and those interested in such organizations in order to facilitate compliance with the laws by tax-exempt organizations and those associated with such organizations.

Present law recognizes that nontax State officials have a need for returns and return information regarding tax-exempt organizations by providing for disclosure of certain information. Section 6104(c) requires the IRS to notify the appropriate State Attorney General, State tax officer, or other State officials charged with overseeing section 501(c)(3) organizations, of determinations made by the IRS with respect to the denial or revocation of tax exemption under section 501(c)(3). The applicable Treasury regulations provide that, for purposes of section protecting the public's interest falls to the State Attorney General or other State official with responsibility for enforcing State laws with respect to charities. The National Association of Attorneys General describes the role of Attorneys General as "counselors to state government agencies and legislatures, and as representatives of the public interest." The publications of State Attorneys General also reflect this view. For example, the California State Attorney General describes the role of that office with respect to charities as follows: "The California Attorney General acts as the legal overseer of charities that do business in the state. The Attorney General has the duty of protecting the interests of all public beneficiaries of charities within his jurisdiction." See, <<http://caag.state.ca.us/charities>>. Similarly, the Pennsylvania Attorney General describes his office's role with regard to charitable organizations as "protect[ing] the public's interest in all property committed to charitable purposes." See <<http://www.attorneygeneral.gov/ppd>>.

6104(c), a determination means a final determination, and that a determination is not final until all administrative review with respect to such determination has been completed.²¹⁴

In 1975, then IRS Assistant Commissioner (EP/EO) Alvin D. Lurie described the “inextricably entwined” regulatory powers of the IRS and State officials with respect to tax-exempt organizations as follows:

The Internal Revenue Service makes tax exemption determinations, and monitors compliance with them. However, when a violation is discovered, the ability to invoke the jurisdiction of any equity court, with its broad and adaptable powers, is uniquely the province of the states. Only in certain limited circumstances can the Service take all of the steps necessary fully to protect the public. . . . The state’s role . . . is to bring about “correction.” The state alone can do this through the exercise of state equity powers. . . . Assuming that the violations warrant revocation of exemption in the public charity case, the Service has virtually no authority under existing law to effect a correction of the situation. Either we can determine not to revoke the exemption, thereby presumably being unable to inform the state attorney general about a situation calling for his action; or, in some cases no less unacceptably, we can compound an already difficult situation by revoking the exemption and imposing ordinary income taxes against the charitable assets, and giving notice of this action to the state attorney general.²¹⁵

Discussion

The present-law rules regarding disclosure of information to nontax State officials have been criticized as not providing sufficient information to enable such officials to carry out their duties. For example, because a final determination by the IRS concerning the denial or revocation of tax-exempt status may not be made for a number of years, a tax-exempt organization may have exhausted its assets through illicit transactions or disposed of assets or changed its operations in a way which can no longer be corrected by the time the IRS is permitted to provide notice to the appropriate State officials.²¹⁶ Furthermore, the IRS is not permitted to provide any notice when an organization withdraws an application for tax exemption prior to an IRS determination because such a withdrawal is not considered to be a final determination.²¹⁷

State officials frequently make referrals to the IRS concerning the questionable operations of tax-exempt organizations as detected by the State officials.²¹⁸ The inability of the IRS to provide any information or feedback to State officials with respect to these referrals or to make referrals to nontax State officials results in a nonreciprocal flow of information between State officials and the IRS, as well as frustration on the part of the IRS and State officials.²¹⁹ On several occasions, the National Association of Attorneys General has adopted resolutions in favor of legislation that would “relax provisions of section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code to permit the sharing of audit and examination information and records for section 501(c)(3) and 501(c)(4) organizations with state agencies with jurisdiction over the activities of those organizations” and “encourage cooperation between the IRS and state regulators by permitting immediate and ongoing feedback when a state agency makes a referral.”²²⁰

The Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS should be permitted, prior to a final determination to deny or revoke tax-exempt status, to disclose to State Attorneys General and other nontax State officials or agencies audit and examination information concerning tax-exempt organizations with respect to whom the State officials have jurisdiction if such State officials have specifically referred the tax-exempt organization to the IRS. In addition, the Joint Committee staff recommends that the IRS should be permitted, either upon request or on its own initiative, to share audit and examination information concerning tax-exempt organizations with nontax State officials and agencies with jurisdiction over the activities of such organizations when the IRS determines that such disclosure may facilitate the resolution of cases and the State has regularly shared information with the IRS regarding potential issues arising with respect to organizations within the State. The Joint Committee staff believes that these recommendations would: (1) enhance the combined efforts of the Federal and State governments to protect the public by promoting the continued flow of information from State officials to the IRS; (2) improve the ability of State officials to monitor compliance with nontax State laws affecting tax-exempt organizations and to enforce and pursue correction of violations of such laws; and (3) facilitate the participation of both the IRS and State officials in the resolution of cases involving significant charitable and fiduciary violations by making more complete information available in earlier phases of such cases to both State officials and the IRS. In order to ensure that the information provided to State officials is used for appropriate purposes, the Joint Committee staff recommends that additional information provided to such officials should be subject to the confidentiality and nondisclosure restrictions applicable to State officials under section 6103.

E. LOBBYING EXPENDITURES

The Joint Committee staff recommends that public charities (both electing and non-electing charities) should be required to provide a general description of their lobbying activities on Schedule A to Form 990.

The Joint Committee staff recommends that public charities should be required to disclose expenditures for self-defense lobbying.

The Joint Committee staff recommends that public charities should be required to disclose expenditures for nonpartisan study, analysis, and research if such study, analysis, or research includes a limited “call to action.”

1. Background and present law

In general

An organization does not qualify for tax-exempt status as a charitable organization described in section 501(c)(3) unless “no substantial part” of its activities constitutes “carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation” (commonly referred to as “lobbying”).²²¹ Thus, public charities may engage in limited lobbying activities, provided that such activities are not substantial, without losing their tax-exempt status and generally without being subject to tax.²²² For purposes of determining whether lobbying activities are a substantial part of a public charity’s overall functions, a public charity may choose between two standards, the “substantial part” test or the “expenditure” test.²²³

The substantial part test derives from the statutory language quoted above and uses a facts and circumstances approach to measure the permissible level of lobbying activities. Because there is no statutory or regulatory guidance clarifying this standard, it is not clear whether the determination is based on the organization’s activities, its expenditures, or both. If public charities exceed the substantial part standard, they risk losing their tax exemption.

²²¹ Sec. 501(c)(3).

²²² In contrast, private foundations are subject to the restriction that lobbying activities, even if insubstantial, may result in the foundation being subject to penalty excise taxes.

²²³ Secs. 501(c)(3), 501(h), and 4911.

The expenditure test sets specific dollar limits, calculated as a percentage of a charity's total exempt purpose expenditures, on the amount a charity may spend to influence legislation.²²⁴ A charity wishing to be subject to the expenditure test must affirmatively elect to do so (the "section 501(h) election");²²⁵ charities that do not file an election are subject to the substantial part test. Organizations that do not make the section 501(h) election are referred to below as non-electing public charities.

"Substantial part" test

Definition of lobbying

There is no statutory definition under section 501(c)(3) of "propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation." However, Treasury regulations provide that an organization is not entitled to tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3) due to its lobbying activities if a substantial part of the organization's activities is: (1) contacting, or urging the public to contact, members of a legislative body for the purpose of proposing, supporting, or opposing legislation; or (2) advocating the adoption or rejection of legislation.²²⁶ Thus, attempts to influence legislation under section 501(c)(3) include directly contacting members of a legislative body (and their staffs) to propose, support, or oppose legislation (so-called "direct lobbying"), and also include urging the public to contact legislative bodies, or otherwise attempting to influence public opinion, with respect to legislation (so-called "grass roots lobbying").

For purposes of section 501(c)(3), the term "legislation" includes action by the Congress, any State legislature, any local council or similar governing body, or the public in a referendum, initiative, constitutional amendment, or similar procedure.²²⁷ "Action" by the Congress or a State legislature or local council refers to introduction, amendment, enactment, defeat, or repeal of Acts, bills, resolutions, or similar items.²²⁸

Exceptions for non-electing public charities

Although the regulations under section 501(c)(3) do not contain any exceptions for activities that are not considered to be lobbying, the private foundation rules under section 4945 describe four exceptions that are generally considered applicable to public charities as well.²²⁹

Nonpartisan analysis, study, or research.--Lobbying does not include the conduct of nonpartisan analysis, study, or research, as long as the dissemination of such analysis does not advocate the adoption of legislation to implement its findings. "Nonpartisan analysis, study, or research" is defined as "an independent exposition of a particular subject matter."²³⁰ The analysis may conclude that legislation is appropriate to achieve a particular objective if it contains a "sufficiently full and fair exposition of the pertinent facts to enable the public or an individual to form an independent opinion or conclusion."²³¹

The results of nonpartisan analysis, study, or research must be made available to "the general public or a segment or members thereof or to governmental bodies, officials, or employees."²³² Such results may be distributed by "any suitable means, including oral or written presentations" provided that the communications are not limited to or directed toward those interested in only one side of a particular issue.²³³ Examples of suitable means of distribution include "reprints of speeches, articles, and reports; presentation of information through conferences, meetings, and discussion; and dissemination to the news media, including radio, television, and newspapers, and to other public forums."²³⁴

²²⁹ Although there is no precedential ruling from the IRS applying the section 4945 exceptions to lobbying for private foundations to nonelecting public charities, the IRS has stated that the section 4945 definitions and exceptions apply to section 501(c)(3) because of a statement in the legislative history that section 4945 intended no change to the substantive law of lobbying other than the substantial part rule. Cl.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1107 (1974) (using the section 4945 regulations to clarify the section 501(c)(3) lobbying provisions); see also Judith E. Kindell & John F. ²³⁴ Id.

Examinations of broad social, economic, and similar problems.--Discussions of broad social or public policy issues that do not advocate a specific legislative proposal generally do not constitute attempts to influence legislation for purposes of section 501(c)(3). Specifically, lobbying communications do not include “public discussion, or communications with members of legislative bodies or governmental employees, the general subject of which is also the subject of legislation before a legislative body, so long as such discussion does not address itself to the merits of a specific legislative proposal and so long as such discussion does not directly encourage recipients to take actions with respect to legislation.”²³⁵

Requests for technical advice or assistance.--Lobbying does not include the provision of technical advice to a governmental body or committee in response to a written request.²³⁶ Likewise, responding to a governmental request for testimony is not treated as a lobbying activity. A request from an individual committee member or a subset of members will not fall within this exception.²³⁷ The offering of opinions or recommendations ordinarily will qualify under this exception only if such opinions or recommendations are specifically requested by the governmental body or committee or are directly related to the materials requested.²³⁸

Self-defense communications.--There is an exception for direct lobbying with respect to proposed legislation that might affect a charity’s existence, powers and duties, tax-exempt status, or the deductibility of contributions (so-called “self-defense lobbying”).²³⁹ Within these specific areas, an organization may communicate with legislators or their staff and may initiate legislation. However, this exception does not cover proposed legislation involving public policy issues that may be of importance to an organization in carrying out future charitable programs.

Application of substantial part test

For charities that do not elect the expenditure test (discussed below), there is no bright-line, mechanical rule for determining whether lobbying activities constitute “no substantial part” of the organization’s overall activities. Rather, the particular facts and circumstances surrounding all activities of the organization (including, staff and volunteer time, expenditures, and significance of the activities to the organization) must be examined. In particular, an arithmetical percentage test (e.g., looking only at the percentage of the budget, or employee's time spent on lobbying), while relevant, has been held not determinative.²⁴⁰

Expenditure test

In general

As an alternative to the substantial part test, the expenditure test permits certain public charities to elect to be governed by specific expenditure limitations on their lobbying activities.²⁴¹ The test establishes two expenditure limits: one restricts the total amount of lobbying expenditures the public charity can make, the other restricts grass roots lobbying expenditures as a subset of total lobbying expenditures. A public charity's total lobbying expenditures for a year are the sum of its expenditures for direct lobbying and its expenditures for grass roots lobbying.

For a public charity electing to be subject to the expenditure test, the allowable amount of lobbying expenditures that can be made for any tax year is determined under a sliding-scale formula. Specifically, the allowable amount of total lobbying expenditures is limited to the sum of (1) 20 percent of the first $500,000 of the organization's exempt purpose expenditures for the year, (2) 15 percent of the next $500,000 of such expenditures, (3) 10 percent of the third $500,000 of such expenditures, and (4) 5 percent of any additional such expenditures.²⁴² In no event, however, can the allowable amount of lobbying for a charity electing the expenditure test exceed $1 million for any year.²⁴³ For this purpose, "exempt purpose expenditures" are defined as expenditures to accomplish the organization's exempt purposes, including properly allocable salary payments, overhead, an allowance for depreciation on a straight-line basis, and all lobbying expenditures, but not including fundraising costs and certain capital expenditures. Grass roots ²⁴⁰ See Haswell v. United States, 500 F.2d 1133 (Ct. Cl. 1974); (holding that an organization's lobbying activities were substantial when roughly 16-20 percent of its expenditures were for lobbying and the organization's lobbying activities were in other respects an important part of its mission); Christian Echoes National Ministry, Inc. v. United States, 470 F.2d 849 (10th Cir. 1972) (rejecting a percentage test in favor of weighing an organization's lobbying activities in light of the organization's overall purposes and activities); Seansongood v. Commissioner, 227 F.2d 907 (6th Cir. 1955) (deciding that lobbying that accounted for less than 5 percent of an organization's activities is not substantial).

lobbying is subject to a separate limitation, equal to 25 percent of the overall permissible lobbying amount.²⁴⁴ In order to prevent organizations from avoiding the dollar limitations of the expenditure test by dividing themselves into technically separate but related entities, certain affiliated organizations under common control are treated as one organization for purpose of applying the arithmetical tests.²⁴⁵

For purposes of the expenditure test, lobbying expenditures are defined as “expenditures for the purpose of influencing legislation (as defined in section 4911(d)).” Section 4911(d), in turn, defines the term “influencing legislation” as:

(A) any attempt to influence any legislation²⁴⁶ through an attempt to affect the opinions of the general public or any segment thereof [i.e., “grass roots lobbying communications”], and

(B) any attempt to influence any legislation through communication with any member or employee of a legislative body, or with any government official or employee who may participate in the formulation of the legislation [i.e., “direct lobbying communications”].²⁴⁷

With respect to communications with legislators and government officials, Treasury regulations provide a two-part test for determining if such a communication by an organization making the section 501(h) election constitutes a “direct lobbying communication.” Under this two-part test, a communication with a legislator or employee of a legislative body, or with any government official or employee who may participate in the formulation of legislation (provided that the principal purpose of the communication is to influence legislation), will be treated as a ²⁴⁶ "Legislation" includes action by legislative bodies but does not include action by "executive, judicial, or administrative bodies." Treas. reg. sec. 56.4911-2(d)(3). The term "administrative bodies" includes school boards, housing authorities, sewer and water districts, zoning boards, and other similar Federal, State, or local special purpose bodies, whether elective or appointive. Treas. reg. sec. 56.4911-2(d)(4).

“direct lobbying communication” under section 4911 only if the communication both (1) refers to “specific legislation” (meaning legislation that has already been introduced in a legislative body or a specific legislative proposal that the organization either supports or opposes), and (2) reflects a view on such legislation.

With respect to communications with the general public, Treasury regulations provide a three-part test for determining whether such a communication by an organization electing the expenditure test constitutes a “grass roots lobbying communication.” Under this three-part test, a communication with the general public will be treated as a “grass roots lobbying communication” only if the communication: (1) refers to specific legislation; (2) reflects a view on such legislation; and (3) encourages the recipient to take action with respect to the legislation (referred to as a “call to action” requirement) in at least one of four specifically enumerated ways.²⁴⁸

Exceptions for electing public charities

The Code and regulations governing the expenditure test incorporate the same exceptions to the definition of lobbying discussed above with respect to the substantial part test and add an additional exception for certain communications between a charity and its members. The regulations also clarify the exception for non-partisan analysis, research or study and the exception for examinations of broad social, economic, and similar problems exception.

Nonpartisan study, analysis, and research.--Treasury regulations provide that nonpartisan analysis that reflects a view on specific legislation is not within the expenditure test exception if the communication “directly encourages” the recipient to take action--meaning that the communication expressly states that the recipient should contact a legislative or government official or employee, includes the address, telephone number or similar information of a such official or employee, or includes a petition tear-off postcard, or similar material for the recipient to send to such an official or employee. However, nonpartisan analysis within the exception is allowed to include a limited (or implicit) “call to action” that specifically identifies one or more legislators who will vote on the legislation as (1) opposing the organization’s views with respect to the legislation, (2) being undecided with respect to the legislation, (3) being the recipient’s representative in the legislature, or (4) being a member of the legislative committee or subcommittee that will consider the legislation.²⁴⁹

An organization may choose any suitable means, including oral or written presentations or disseminations to the news media, to distribute its nonpartisan analysis or research.²⁵⁰ However, communications may not be limited to, or be directed toward, persons who are interested solely in one side of a particular issue.²⁵¹

Examinations of broad social, economic, and similar problems.--Treasury regulations provide that "[e]xaminations and discussions of broad social, economic, and similar problems are neither direct lobbying communications under section 56.4911-2(b)(1) nor grass roots lobbying communications under section 56.4911-2(b)(2) even if the problems are of the type with which government would be expected to deal ultimately.²⁵² Consequently, lobbying communications do not include public discussion, or communications with members of legislative bodies or governmental employees, the general subject of which is also the subject of legislation before a legislative body, so long as such discussion does not address itself to the merits of a specific legislative proposal and so long as such discussion does not directly encourage recipients to take action with respect to legislation.

Membership communications.--Certain communications between an electing public charity and its members that would be treated as grassroots communications if they were directed to nonmembers will not be treated as lobbying if directed solely to members.²⁵³ For purposes of this rule, a member is someone who provides more than a nominal amount of time or money to the organization.²⁵⁴ A communication to a member that refers to and reflects a view on specific legislation will not be treated as a lobbying communication if: (1) the communication is directed only to members of the organization; (2) the specific legislation is of direct interest to the organization and its members; (3) the communication does not directly encourage the member to engage in direct lobbying; and (4) the communication does not directly encourage the member to engage in grassroots lobbying.²⁵⁵ Expenditures for a communication that satisfies (1), (2), and (4), but not (3) are treated as direct lobbying.²⁵⁶ Expenditures for a communication that satisfies (1), (2), and (3), but not (4) are treated as grassroots lobbying.²⁵⁷

There is also a self-defense communication exception for communications with members. If a communication by a public charity directly encourages members to engage in direct lobbying activities that would meet the definition of self-defense lobbying if conducted by the organization, that membership communication will not be treated as direct lobbying by the organization.²⁵⁸

Lobbying expense allocations

In addition to defining direct and grass roots lobbying communications and the five statutory exceptions, Treasury regulations provide detailed guidance for allocating particular expenditures to lobbying communications. In general, public charities electing the expenditure test are required to treat as lobbying expenditures all direct costs of producing the communication, as well as an allocable share of overhead costs.²⁵⁹ In addition, rules are provided for so-called “mixed purpose” expenditures and for allocating costs when non-lobbying materials (e.g., nonpartisan analysis) subsequently are used by an organization as part of a grass roots lobbying campaign.

²⁵⁷ Treas. reg. sec. 56.4911-5(d). A communication “directly encourages” a member to engage in grassroots lobbying if it incorporates any of the following: (1) it states that the recipient should encourage any nonmember to contact a legislator, a legislator’s staff, or other government employee who participates in the formulation of legislation for the principal purpose of influencing legislation; (2) it states that the recipient should provide to any nonmember the address, telephone number, or similar information for a legislator or employee of a legislative body; or (3) it provides (or requests that the member provide) a petition or tear-off postcard to use to ask any nonmember to communicate views to a legislator, a legislator’s staff, or other government employee who participates in the formulation of legislation for the principal purpose of influencing legislation. Treas. reg. sec. 56.4911-5(f)(6)(ii).

Penalties applicable to public charities

If an electing public charity exceeds either the limit on total lobbying expenditures or on grassroots lobbying expenditures for a particular year, it is subject to a 25-percent excise tax on the excess amounts. The charity's exemption will not be in jeopardy, however, unless either limit is exceeded by more than 50 percent, calculated using an average of lobbying expenditures over the four most recent years.

For nonelecting public charities, excessive lobbying activities result in loss of tax-exempt status. In addition, in 1987, section 4912 was enacted to provide for the imposition of penalty excise taxes due to improper lobbying expenditures made by a nonelecting public charity (other than a church). However, the section 4912 excise taxes may be imposed only if the charity ceases to qualify for tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3) due to its substantial lobbying activities. Section 4912 imposes on such a disqualified organization an excise tax equal to five percent of the amount of lobbying expenditures incurred during the year in which the organization has ceased to qualify under section 501(c)(3) due to making lobbying expenditures. Organization managers who, without reasonable cause, agree to make lobbying expenditures knowing that they are likely to result in revocation of the organization's tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3) also are subject to an excise tax equal to five percent of such lobbying expenditures.

There is no present-law rule preventing an organization that loses its tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3) because it engages in substantial lobbying (or normally exceeds the lobbying expenditure limits) from applying for restoration of its section 501(c)(3) status in a subsequent taxable year, at which time the organization will again be subject to the lobbying limitation. However, section 504(a)(2)(A) provides that a charitable organization (other than a church) that loses its tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3) because of excessive lobbying activities may not attempt to thereafter escape the lobbying limitation by being treated as a tax-exempt social welfare organization under section 501(c)(4).

Lobbying by nonsection 501(c)(3) organizations

Section 501(c) organizations other than charities described in section 501(c)(3) are not subject to any specific provision that restricts their lobbying activities. In general, the only limit imposed by the Code is that the lobbying activities must be germane to the accomplishment of the organization's exempt purposes. For some organizations, such as social welfare organizations or business leagues, lobbying may be the organization's primary, or even sole, activity.

Associations that receive tax-deductible dues.--As a result of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, tax-exempt trade associations and certain other tax-exempt organizations (but not charities described in section 501(c)(3)) generally are required to provide annual information disclosure to members (sometimes referred to as "flow-through information disclosure") estimating the portion of their dues allocable to lobbying activities as defined under section 162(e)(1). The purpose of this rule is to prevent taxpayers from avoiding section 162(e)

(which disallows trade or business expense deductions for political campaign and lobbying expenditures) by paying otherwise deductible dues to a trade association or other tax-exempt entity which, in turn, makes political campaign or lobbying expenditures on behalf of its dues-paying members. Accordingly, section 162(e)(3) specifically provides that no trade or business expense deduction is allowed for the portion of dues paid to a tax-exempt organization which the organization notifies the taxpayer under section 6033(e) is allocable to political campaign or lobbying expenditures made by the organization.

Flow-through information disclosure is not required for an organization that (1) incurs only a de minimis amount (i.e., $2,000 or less) of in-house political campaign and lobbying expenditures during the taxable year; (2) elects to pay a 35-percent proxy tax on its political campaign and lobbying expenditures incurred during the taxable year rather than provide flow-through information disclosure to its members; or (3) establishes pursuant to Treasury Department rules that substantially all of its dues monies are paid by members not entitled to deduct such dues in computing their taxable income (sec. 6033(e)).

Disclosure of lobbying expenses

For Federal tax purposes, public charities are required to disclose their lobbying expenditures on Schedule A of Form 990 (a copy of Schedule A is attached as Appendix B), and to maintain records that will enable them to calculate and report these expenditures. Public charities electing the expenditure test report their expenditures on two charts. The first table requires the organization to list the amounts spent on grassroots lobbying, on direct lobbying, and on the organization's exempt purposes. The table requires this information both for the electing public charity and for its affiliated group, if the charity is part of one. The second table requires the organization to fill in its lobbying expenditures for the four most recent years in order to determine whether, on average, the organization has exceeded the lobbying expenditure limits during that period. Schedule A does not provide any information on the issues the organization lobbied nor does it require disclosure of whether the organization engaged in activities that come within one of the statutory exceptions to lobbying. Expenditures for activities that come within one of the exceptions to the definition of lobbying will be disclosed elsewhere on the return, although they are unlikely to be identified specifically by activity. For example, nonpartisan study, analysis, or research projects typically will be disclosed as part of a charity's educational activities in Part III of Form 990, which requires disclosure of program service expenses for each of the charity's exempt purpose accomplishments.

Nonelecting public charities complete a different table on Schedule A requesting information about whether the organization attempted to influence national, state or local legislation through the use of: volunteers; paid staff or management; media advertisements; mailings to members, legislators, or the public; publications, or published or broadcast statements; grants to other organizations for lobbying purposes; direct contact with legislators, their staffs, government officials, or a legislative body; or rallies, demonstrations, seminars, conventions, speeches, lectures, or any other means. If the organization used any of the above methods of lobbying, it must disclose the amount spent on the lobbying activity and provide a detailed description of its lobbying activities. According to the instructions for Schedule A of Form 990, the detailed description should include all lobbying activities, whether expenses are incurred or not. Thus, lobbying activities carried out by unreimbursed volunteers must be disclosed. As is the case for electing public charities, there is no requirement that a nonelecting public charity disclose on Schedule A activities or amounts spent on activities that are defined as an exception to the definition of lobbying; however, expenditures for such activities will be disclosed elsewhere on the return, although they are unlikely to be identified specifically by activity.

Lobbying Disclosure Act of 1995

The Lobbying Disclosure Act of 1995 (the “LDA”) requires persons, including tax-exempt organizations, that engage in certain lobbying activities to register with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.²⁶⁰ The LDA also requires persons that register to report lobbying expenditures semiannually. Organizations that register employees who lobby on the organization’s behalf have the option of reporting their lobbying expenses under the LDA using either the LDA definitions of lobbying activities or the definitions under the applicable Internal Revenue Code provisions: section 4911 (the lobbying expenditure test, discussed above) and section 162(e) (denying a federal tax deduction for certain lobbying expenses of businesses and requiring tax-exempt associations to disclose the association’s lobbying expenses to members).

A recent report by the GAO reviewed the impact that differences in the definitions (LDA, section 4911, and section 162(e)) have on registration and reporting under the LDA.²⁶¹ The report concluded that the LDA definition of lobbying differs significantly from the definitions of lobbying under sections 4911 and 162(e). These differences can affect whether an organization is required to register under the LDA and, if it must register, what information the organization is required to report under the LDA. The GAO identified several options, including harmonizing the different definitions of lobbying activities, that might help to ensure that the public disclosure purposes of the LDA are realized. Because analysis of the options proposed by the GAO would require substantial review of the various legislative purposes for enacting the LDA (which is not a Federal tax statute), section 4911, and section 162(e), as well as the different objectives underlying each provision’s definition of lobbying activities, the Joint Committee staff determined that review of the GAO options for modifying the disclosure provisions of the LDA was not within the scope of this study.

2. Discussion

Disclosure of lobbying activities

On the current Schedule A to Form 990, electing public charities are required to disclose their lobbying expenditures on two tables. Schedule A to Form 990 does not require an electing charity to provide any description of its lobbying activities; thus, someone reviewing Schedule A is unable to ascertain what legislation the organization lobbied for or against or the manner in which the organization engaged in lobbying activities (other than whether the organization engaged in grassroots or direct lobbying). Schedule A requires nonelecting public charities to state the lobbying methods used, i.e., whether they attempted to influence legislation using: volunteers; paid staff; media advertisements; mailings to members, legislators, or the public; publications; direct contact with legislators; or any other means. If an organization used any of the listed methods of lobbying, it must disclose the amount spent on the lobbying activity and provide a detailed description of its lobbying activities. The organization is not, however, required to disclose what legislation it lobbied for or against.

The Joint Committee staff recognizes that the information currently requested on Schedule A is designed to provide the IRS with sufficient information to make an initial determination of whether an organization's lobbying activities were reasonable for purposes of the lobbying limitation on organizations described in section 501(c)(3) (that is, whether the activities crossed the "no substantial part" threshold). However, Schedule A is used by many people, including donors and potential donors, to learn about an organization's activities. Furthermore, the Joint Committee staff believes that the public has a significant interest in understanding and monitoring the lobbying activities of a public charity in order to ensure that such activities promote rather than detract from the organization's other exempt activities. Consequently, the Joint Committee staff believes that the Schedule A would be more helpful to the public if it required both electing and nonelecting public charities to provide a detailed description of the legislation addressed in their lobbying efforts and the manner in which organizations engaged in lobbying activities.

Self-defense lobbying

Under present law, self-defense lobbying (lobbying with respect to proposed legislation that might affect the organization's existence, powers and duties, tax-exempt status, or the deductibility of contributions) is an exception to the definition of lobbying. The Joint Committee staff believes that the fact that self-defense lobbying is an exception to the definition of lobbying for purposes of determining whether lobbying is a substantial part of a public charity's activities is unrelated to the question of whether the public should have access to information about what amount of a charity's resources were devoted to such activities. The Joint Committee staff believes that the exception for self-defense lobbying permits organizations to expend a potentially unlimited amount on activities that, but for the exception, constitute direct lobbying, without being required to disclose the expenditures specifically allocable to those activities. Under these circumstances, disclosure of amounts attributable to self-defense lobbying on Schedule A to Form 990 is appropriate in order to ensure that the public and the IRS have a complete understanding of the organization's activities and expenditures.

In addition, the Joint Committee staff believes that electing public charities should be required to disclose amounts spent on membership communications that encourage members to engage in direct lobbying activities that would meet the definition of self-defense lobbying if conducted by the organization.

Nonpartisan study, analysis, and research

Under present law, electing public charities may engage in nonpartisan analysis activities that include a limited "call to action," meaning that the analysis may specifically identify one or more legislators who will vote on legislation as (1) opposing the organization's views with respect to the legislation, (2) being undecided with respect to the legislation, (3) being the recipient's representative in the legislature, or (4) being a member of the legislative committee or subcommittee that will consider the legislation. The Joint Committee staff believes that such activities constitute a form of advocacy of which the public should be aware. Under these circumstances, the expenditures attributable to such activities should be disclosed on Schedule A to Form 990, in order to provide the public with a more complete understanding of a public charity's activities and expenditures. As previously noted above, the mere fact that certain expenditures do not meet the technical definition of lobbying for certain purposes under the Code does not eliminate the public interest in access to information concerning such expenditures. Disclosure of these expenditures would provide the public with additional information as to the usage of a tax-exempt organization's resources and the relevance of such expenditures in accomplishing the purposes for which tax-exempt status is granted.

APPENDICES

APPENDIX A: LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF SECTION 6104

Three Internal Revenue Code sections (sections 6103, 6104, and 6110) and the Freedom of Information Act (the “FOIA”) govern disclosure of information relating to tax-exempt organizations. Under present law, section 6103 provides that tax returns and return information are confidential and may not be disclosed publicly, except as otherwise provided in the Code.²⁶² Given the breadth of the definitions of “tax returns” and “tax return information,” much tax-exempt organization information comes within the ambit of section 6103. However, section 6104, which preceded enactment of section 6103, requires public disclosure of certain categories of tax-exempt organization documents and information. Thus, as a general rule, to the extent that section 6104 specifically provides for the disclosure of tax-exempt organization information, other disclosure provisions (sections 6103, 6110 or the FOIA) do not apply.²⁶³

This appendix sets forth the evolution of section 6104. A thorough description of the legislative history of section 6103 is provided in Volume I of this study.

Introduction

Prior to the end of the nineteenth century, Federal revenues were derived primarily from import duties and excise taxes, which did not affect charitable organizations. State governments played the principal role in formulating government policy with respect to charitable entities. Charitable, educational, and religious organizations traditionally were accorded exemption from property taxation and, to some extent, from other forms of taxation.

Early Federal income tax statutes, which were in force briefly during and after the Civil War, applied only to certain specified classes of businesses (e.g., railroads, canal companies, banks); thus, no exemption provisions were needed to exclude charitable and similar entities from such taxes. The first Federal tax on the income and profits of corporations generally (the Tariff

A “return” includes any tax or information return, declaration of estimated tax, or claim for refund required by, or provided for, or permitted under the provisions of Title 26, which is filed with the IRS. Sec. 6103(b)(1). “Return” also includes any amendment or supplement to the filed return. Sec. 6103(b)(1). “Return information” is defined broadly to include any data received by, recorded by, prepared by, furnished to, or collected by the Secretary with respect to a return or with respect to the determination of the existence, or possible existence, or liability (or the amount thereof) of any person under this title for any tax, penalty, interest, fine, forfeiture, or other imposition, or offense. The term “return information” does not include data in a form which cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a particular taxpayer. Sec. 6103(b)(2)(A).

Act of 1894) provided a specific exemption for charitable, religious, and educational organizations:

nothing herein contained shall apply to. . . corporations, companies, or associations organized and conducted solely for charitable, religious or educational purposes, . . . nor to the stocks, shares, funds, or securities held by any fiduciary or trustee for charitable, religious, or educational purposes²⁶⁴

A similar exemption has appeared in every subsequent Federal income tax law.

The charitable donation tax deduction for the individual income tax was enacted in 1917 on the theory that the deduction would stimulate donations and thus help charities.²⁶⁵ The deduction was limited to 15 percent of adjusted gross income. An estate tax deduction for bequests to charity was added in 1918.²⁶⁶ Other Federal tax provisions favoring charitable organizations have been enacted since, including exemption from gift taxes and the corporate donation tax deduction.²⁶⁷

Beginning in 1950, the development of Federal tax policy regarding charitable organizations entered a new phase. For the first time, statutory rules were enacted to deal with business activities of certain charitable entities and with certain areas of abuse, including self-dealing, imprudent investments, and unreasonable accumulations of income. The Congress also began to expand reporting requirements applicable to tax-exempt organizations and to require increased public availability of information relating to tax-exempt organizations in order to enable the public to scrutinize the activities of certain tax-exempt organizations. The Congress intended that such organizations be subject to a certain degree of public accountability in view of their privileged tax status.

Section 101 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 (the “1939 Code”) provided tax-exempt status to a variety of organizations, including labor, agricultural and horticultural organizations, fraternal beneficiary societies, credit unions, cemetery companies, business leagues, chambers of commerce, social clubs, benevolent life insurance associations, mutual insurance companies other than life or marine, cooperative farmers’ associations, title holding corporations, instrumentalities of the United States organized by Act of Congress, voluntary employees’ beneficiary associations, teachers’ retirement fund associations, and religious or apostolic associations or corporations. In addition, section 101(6) of the 1939 Code provided tax-exempt status to:

corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation.

The section 101(6) exemption was very similar to present-law section 501(c)(3), although it did not prohibit political activities.

Revenue Act of 1943

The initial requirement that certain tax-exempt organizations file annual information returns was added to the 1939 Code by the Revenue Act of 1943.²⁶⁸ The primary purpose of the 1943 provision was to provide Congress with sufficient information to determine the need for legislative restrictions on charitable organizations.²⁶⁹ Pursuant to the Revenue Act of 1943, section 54(f) of the 1939 Code provided that annual returns (which were called “Form 990” then, as they are now) were to be filed by organizations exempt under section 101, but excluded many organizations exempt under section 101(6), including religious organizations and certain organizations affiliated with religious organizations, schools, and charitable organizations and organizations for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals if such organizations received government grants or was primarily supported by contributions from the general public. ²⁶⁹ H.R. Rep. No. 78-841, at 24-25 (1943). Of particular concern was the involvement of tax-exempt organizations in commercial activities. At the time, the Federal tax system followed a “destination of income” test, under which an active business could enjoy tax exemption so long as the profits were dedicated to charitable purposes. See Trinidad v. Sagrada Orden de Predicadores, 263 U.S. 578 (1924); Roche’s Beach, Inc. v. Commissioner, 96 F.2d 776 (2d Cir. 1938). By the early 1940’s, however, this approach had become increasingly controversial. The legislative history of the Revenue Act of 1943 explains that requiring certain tax-exempt organizations to file returns was the first step toward “closing this existing loophole and requiring the payment of tax, and the protection of legitimate companies against this unfair competitive situation.” H.R. Rep. No. 78-871, at 24.

beneficiary societies and instrumentalities of the United States organized by Act of Congress were also excepted from the filing requirement. Organizations formed for scientific or literary purposes and organizations that were supported by a limited number of donors (generally referred to as “private foundations”), as well as other organizations that were exempt under section 101 were required to file annual returns.

For those organizations required to file Form 990, such returns were subject to the same disclosure rules applicable to all taxpayers at the time. Returns were treated as public records; however, only those authorized by order of the President had access to returns.²⁷⁰

Two years after the 1943 enactment of the information return requirements, the Treasury Department submitted a detailed report of the activities and resources of nonprofit corporations.²⁷¹ The report concluded that further studies were needed to decide whether the exemption provisions were a “loophole for tax evasion and avoidance.”²⁷²

The need for reform of the rules relating to tax-exempt organizations was noted by President Truman in his 1950 message to Congress regarding his tax program. He stated: “[t]here are also instances where the exemption accorded charitable trust funds has been used as a cloak for speculative business ventures, and the funds intended for charitable purposes, buttressed by tax exemption, have been used to acquire or retain control over a wide variety of industrial enterprises.”²⁷³ Following President Truman’s message, the House Committee on Ways and Means conducted extensive hearings in 1950 on various abuses involving tax-exempt organizations. The hearings focused on the application of the unrelated business income tax and on abuses by private foundations. Several witnesses supported the expansion of reporting and disclosure requirements by tax-exempt organizations. Although the House ultimately did not adopt additional reporting and disclosure requirements at that time, the Senate did, and additional reporting and disclosure provisions were included in the Revenue Act of 1950 (the “1950 Act”).²⁷⁴

²⁷⁴ Revenue Act of 1950, Pub. L. No. 81-814 (1950). S. Rep. No. 81-2375, 125 (1950).

The 1950 Act adopted rules to address abusive transactions and also added section 153 to the 1939 Code providing that organizations already required to file an annual information return under section 54(f), as well as trusts claiming charitable deductions, were to report more extensive financial information than had previously been required, including gross income, expenses, disbursements, accumulated income within the year, accumulated income as of the beginning of the year, disbursements from principal in the current and prior years for exempt purpose activities, and a balance sheet.²⁷⁵ The 1950 Act also added the first disclosure requirement specifically for tax-exempt organizations by providing that Form 990 was open for public inspection by submitting a written request to the IRS.²⁷⁶

The 1950 Act did not, however, expand the category of organizations that were required to file Form 990. Consequently, the rules designed to prevent abuses, expand reporting, and require disclosure were not extended to religious organizations, schools, and publicly supported organizations, but only to organizations formed for scientific or literary purposes, organizations that were supported by a limited number of donors, and other organizations that were exempt under section 101. The reasons for this pattern of coverage were summarized in the Report of the Senate Finance Committee: “The organizations excluded from the application of these provisions are in general what might be called ‘public’ organizations and because of this characteristic are not believed likely to become involved in any of these prohibited transactions.”²⁷⁷

Technical Amendments Act of 1958

The disclosure rules applicable to tax-exempt organizations were expanded by the Revenue Act of 1958 (the “1958 Act”), which added to section 6104 the requirement that applications for tax exemption and supporting documents for all organizations exempt under section 501(a) and described in section 501(c) be made available for public inspection at the IRS National Office of the IRS and, in the case of applications filed subsequent to the 1958 amendments, at the appropriate IRS field service office.²⁷⁸ Anything in applications for tax exemption which would reveal trade secrets or information or which could adversely affect national defense would be withheld from public inspection. The legislative history provides the following rationale for public disclosure of exemption applications: “[the] committee believes that making these applications available to the public will provide substantial additional aid to the

Internal Revenue Service in determining whether organizations are actually operating in the manner in which they have stated in their applications for exemption.²⁷⁹

The 1958 Act added two additional reporting and disclosure requirements: (1) applications and supporting data must be made available to Congressional committees in the same manner as tax returns; and (2) charitable organizations that are required to file Form 990 must report their total contributions.²⁸⁰

Expansion of filing and disclosure requirements to all tax-exempt organizations

Although concern about abuse of charitable foundations had been part of the impetus for the reforms implemented by the 1950 Act, the restrictions on such entities that emerged from the 1950 Act were fairly modest. During the 1950's and 1960's, the number of "family foundations" (charitable organizations supported by a limited number of donors, also referred to as "private foundations") expanded rapidly, and these organizations attracted much attention from the press as useful vehicles for tax avoidance and personal benefit. In the 1960's, Treasury issued a report on private foundations,²⁸¹ the House Select Small Business Committee held hearings from 1962-1969, and there were lengthy hearings held by the tax-writing committees on the Tax Reform Act of 1969, which proposed numerous restrictions on private foundations activities and operations. These activities had demonstrated specific instances where prior law had been inadequate to prevent the use of foundations for controlling business enterprises and benefitting substantial contributors and the expense of charitable programs.

Tax Reform Act of 1969

Pursuant to the Tax Reform Act of 1969 (the "1969 Act"), the Congress enacted a series of rules designed to ensure that Federal income tax incentives would be available only to private foundations whose assets and income are devoted to charitable, and not private, purposes. While private foundations were the focus of the legislation and the Congress enacted specific filing requirements for foundations,²⁸² the Congress also took steps to broaden considerably the filing and disclosure requirements applicable to all tax-exempt organizations.

The 1969 Act required all tax-exempt organizations to file annual information returns, except churches, their integrated auxiliaries (e.g., church-affiliated religious schools and church youth, mens', and womens' groups), associations or conventions of churches, religious orders with respect to their exclusively religious activities, organizations that normally have gross receipts of $5,000 or less and which were, at the time of the 1969 Act, exempt from filing, and organizations exempted from the filing requirement by the Secretary of the Treasury.²⁸³ The 1969 Act also provided that returns filed by tax-exempt organizations are required to be provided to appropriate State officials, and that annual information returns filed by private foundations were required to be made available at the foundation's office for at least 180 days and the foundation was required to publicize their availability.²⁸⁴ Private foundations that willfully failed to comply with the requirement to permit public inspection of their Forms 990 could be subject to a penalty of $1,000 with respect to each failure to comply with the publication and inspection requirements. The 1969 Act also added a provision that names and addresses of contributors to tax-exempt organizations other than private foundations were not to be disclosed to the public.

The legislative history explains the need for the expanded filing and disclosure requirements of the 1969 Act:

The present information return requirements are essentially the same as those provided by the 1950 amendments to the charitable organization provisions of the code. The primary purpose of these requirements is to provide the Internal Revenue Service with the information needed to enforce the tax laws. The House and the Finance Committee concluded that the experience of the past two decades indicates that more information is needed on a more current basis for more organizations and that this information should be made more readily available to the public, including State officials.²⁸⁵

Improving the accessibility of Forms 990 and exemption applications

Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987

²⁸² The 1969 Act imposed two new filing requirements specifically affecting private foundations: (1) reporting of liability for private foundation excise taxes under chapter 42, and (2) a foundation manager's report under section 6056.

²⁸⁵ S. Rep. No. 91-552, at 52 (1969).

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (“OBRA 1987”) eliminated the requirement that members of the public who were interested in reviewing or obtaining a copy of the annual information return (other than a private foundation) or an exemption application (in the case of all tax-exempt organizations) had to submit a request to the IRS.²⁸⁶ Specifically, OBRA 1987 added to section 6104 a requirement that organizations described in section 501(c) (other than private foundations) to make copies of their three most recent Forms 990 available for public inspection at the organization’s principal office and certain regional or district offices during regular business hours.²⁸⁷ The legislation also required all organizations described in section 501(c), including private foundations, to make copies of their applications for recognition of exemption, documents submitted in support of the application, and any determination letter or other document issued by the IRS with respect to the application available for public inspection at the organization’s principal office and certain regional or district offices during regular business hours. An organization was not required, however, to distribute copies of these documents to the general public.

OBRA 1987 also enacted penalties for failure to comply with the public disclosure requirements. Tax-exempt organizations that fail to make their annual returns and applications for exemption available for public inspection are subject to a penalty of $10 for each day the failure continues, with a maximum penalty with respect to any one return not to exceed $5,000, and without limitation with respect to any one application. In addition, a penalty for willfully failing to make an annual return or application available for public inspection of $1,000 per return or application was enacted.²⁸⁸

The legislative history provides the following rationale for the expanded disclosure requirements:

The committee found that the present-law procedure under which the public can obtain copies of the exemption application and annual information returns of tax-exempt organizations through requests to the Internal Revenue Service has not proved effective. For example, the present-law disclosure procedure does not result in full and timely public disclosure of the activities of charitable organizations, as needed to facilitate accountability of such organizations to the public from whom they solicit tax-deductible funds. . . . In the case of charitable organizations, the committee believes that increased availability of information will help assure that the double tax benefits of deductibility of contributions and exemption from income tax are limited to organizations whose assets are devoted exclusively to charitable purposes, as required by the tax law. Also, because most such charities regularly solicit contributions or receive other support from the public, the public should have ready access to current information about the activities of these organizations. . . .²⁸⁹

Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2

In 1996, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2 (“TBOR2”) added the present-law requirement that any tax-exempt organization (other than a private foundation) that files a Form 990 is required to comply with requests for copies of the organization’s Form 990 for the three most recent taxable years or application for tax-exempt status and supporting documents.²⁹⁰ The request may be made in person or in writing. If the request is made in person, the copies must be provided immediately. If the request is made in writing, the copies must be provided within 30 days. Copies must be provided without charge other than a reasonable fee for any reproduction and mailing costs. Organizations may comply with this requirement by making copies “widely available.” The legislative history of the provision explained that the new provisions were designed to enhance the oversight and public accountability of tax-exempt organizations by providing increased public access to documents filed by such organizations with the IRS.²⁹¹

TBOR2 also increased the penalties imposed on tax-exempt organizations that fail to allow public inspection or provide copies of certain annual returns or applications for exemption to $20 per day (with a maximum of $10,000).²⁹² In addition, TBOR2 increased the penalty for willful failure to allow public inspections or provide copies to $5,000.²⁹³

1998 Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act

The 1998 Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act (the “1998 Act”) extended the expanded disclosure requirements of TBOR2 to private foundations. Thus, private foundations also will be required to comply with requests for copies of the foundation’s annual information return for any of the foundation’s three most recent taxable years and its application for tax exemption and

The provision extending the disclosure requirements to private foundations will be effective 60 days after the Treasury Department publishes final regulations in the Federal Register. Final regulations were published on Jan. 13, 2000; thus, the new disclosure provisions will apply to private foundations whose annual information returns are due on or after March 13, 2000.²⁹⁵

Part III Technical Requirements

1 Are you filing Form 1023 within 15 months from the end of the month in which your organization was created or formed? Yes No
If you answer "Yes," do not answer questions on lines 2 through 6 below.

2 If one of the exceptions to the 15-month filing requirement shown below applies, check the appropriate box and proceed to question 7.

Exceptions—You are not required to file an exemption application within 15 months if the organization:

- a Is a church, interchurch organization of local units of a church, a convention or association of churches, or an integrated auxiliary of a church. See Specific Instructions, Line 2a, on page 4;
- b Is not a private foundation and normally has gross receipts of not more than $5,000 in each tax year; or
- c Is a subordinate organization covered by a group exemption letter, but only if the parent or supervisory organization timely submitted a notice covering the subordinate.

3 If the organization does not meet any of the exceptions on line 2 above, are you filing Form 1023 within 27 months from the end of the month in which the organization was created or formed? Yes No

If "Yes," your organization qualifies under Regulation section 301.9100-2, for an automatic 12-month extension of the 15-month filing requirement. Do not answer questions 4 through 6.

If "No," answer question 4.

If "Yes," give the reasons for not filing this application within the 27-month period described in question 3. See Specific Instructions, Part III, Line 4, before completing this item. Do not answer questions 5 and 6.

If "No," answer questions 5 and 6.

5 If you answer "No" to question 4, your organization's qualification as a section 501(c)(3) organization can be recognized only from the date this application is filed. Therefore, do you want us to consider the application as a request for recognition of exemption as a section 501(c)(3) organization from the date the application is received and not retroactively to the date the organization was created or formed? . . . Yes No

6 If you answer "Yes" to question 5 above and wish to request recognition of section 501(c)(4) status for the period beginning with the date the organization was formed and ending with the date the Form 1023 application was received (the effective date of the organization's section 501(c)(3) status), check here and attach a completed page 1 of Form 1024 to this application.

Instructions

Although a church, its integrated auxiliaries, or a convention or association of churches is not required to file Form 1023 to be exempt from Federal income tax or to receive tax-deductible contributions, such an organization may find it advantageous to obtain recognition of exemption. In this event, you should submit information showing that your organization is a church, synagogue, association or convention of churches, religious order or religious organization that is an integral part of a church, and that it is carrying out the functions of a church.

In determining whether an admittedly religious organization is also a church, the IRS does not accept any and every assertion that such an organization is a church. Because beliefs and practices vary so widely, there is no single definition of the word "church" for tax purposes. The IRS considers the facts and circumstances of each organization applying for church status.

The IRS maintains two basic guidelines in determining that an organization meets the religious purposes test:

1. That the particular religious beliefs of the organization are truly and sincerely held, and
2. That the practices and rituals associated with the organization's religious beliefs or creed are not illegal or contrary to clearly defined public policy.

In order for the IRS to properly evaluate your organization's activities and religious purposes, it is important that all questions in Schedule A be answered.

The information submitted with Schedule A will be a determining factor in granting the "church" status requested by your organization. In completing the schedule, consider the following points:

1. The organization's activities in furtherance of its beliefs must be exclusively religious, and
 2. An organization will not qualify for exemption if it has a substantial nonexempt purpose of serving the private interests of its founder or the founder's family.

Schedule B. Schools, Colleges, and Universities

1 Does, or will, the organization normally have: (a) a regularly scheduled curriculum, (b) a regular faculty of qualified teachers, (c) a regularly enrolled student body, and (d) facilities where its educational activities are regularly carried on? Yes No
 If "No," do not complete the rest of Schedule B.

2 Is the organization an instrumentality of a state or political subdivision of a state? Yes No
 If "Yes," document this in Part II and do not complete items 3 through 10 of Schedule B. (See instructions on the back of Schedule B.)

3 Does or will the organization (or any department or division within it) discriminate in any way on the basis of race with respect to:

a Admissions? Yes No
b Use of facilities or exercise of student privileges? Yes No c Faculty or administrative staff? Yes No
d Scholarship or loan programs? Yes No
 If "Yes" for any of the above, explain.

4 Does the organization include a statement in its charter, bylaws, or other governing instrument, or in a resolution of its governing body, that it has a racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students? Yes No
 Attach whatever corporate resolutions or other official statements the organization has made on this subject.

5a Has the organization made its racially nondiscriminatory policies known in a manner that brings the policies to the attention of all segments of the general community that it serves? Yes No
 If "Yes," describe how these policies have been publicized and how often relevant notices or announcements have been made. If no newspaper or broadcast media notices have been used, explain.

b If applicable, attach clippings of any relevant newspaper notices or advertising, or copies of tapes or scripts used for media broadcasts. Also attach copies of brochures and catalogs dealing with student admissions, programs, and scholarships, as well as representative copies of all written advertising used as a means of informing prospective students of the organization's programs.

6 Attach a numerical schedule showing the racial composition, as of the current academic year, and projected to the extent feasible for the next academic year, of: (a) the student body, and (b) the faculty and administrative staff.

7 Attach a list showing the amount of any scholarship and loan funds awarded to students enrolled and the racial composition of the students who have received the awards.

8a Attach a list of the organization's incorporators, founders, board members, and donors of land or buildings, whether individuals or organizations.

b State whether any of the organizations listed in 8a have as an objective the maintenance of segregated public or private school education, and, if so, whether any of the individuals listed in 8a are officers or active members of such organizations.

9a Enter the public school district and county in which the organization is located.

b Was the organization formed or substantially expanded at the time of public school desegregation in the above district or county? Yes No

10 Has the organization ever been determined by a state or Federal administrative agency or judicial body to be racially discriminatory? Yes No

If "Yes," attach a detailed explanation identifying the parties to the suit, the forum in which the case was heard, the cause of action, the holding in the case, and the citations (if any) for the case. Also describe in detail what changes in the organization's operation, if any, have occurred since then.

Instructions

A "school" is an organization that has the primary function of presenting formal instruction, normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum, normally has a regularly enrolled student body, and has a place where its educational activities are carried on.

The term generally corresponds to the definition of an "educational organization" in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii). Thus, the term includes primary, secondary, preparatory and high schools, and colleges and universities. The term does not include organizations engaged in both educational and noneducational activities unless the latter are merely incidental to the educational activities. A school for handicapped children is included within the term, but an organization merely providing handicapped children with custodial care is not.

For purposes of Schedule B, "Sunday schools" that are conducted by a church are not included in the term "schools," but separately organized schools (such as parochial schools, universities, and similar institutions) are included in the term.

A private school that otherwise meets the requirements of section 501(c)(3) as an educational institution will not qualify for exemption under section 501(a) unless it has a racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students.

This policy means that the school admits students of any race to all the rights, privileges, programs, and activities generally accorded or made available to students at that school and that the school does not discriminate on the basis of race in the administration of its educational policies, admissions policies, scholarship and loan programs, and athletic or other school-administered programs.

The IRS considers discrimination on the basis of race to include discrimination on the basis of color and national or ethnic origin. A policy of a school that favors racial minority groups in admissions, facilities, programs, and financial assistance will not constitute discrimination on the basis of race when the purpose and effect is to promote the establishment and maintenance of that school's racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students.

See Rev. Proc. 75-50, 1975-2 C.B. 587, for guidelines and recordkeeping requirements for determining whether private schools that are applying for recognition of exemption have racially nondiscriminatory policies as to students.

An instrumentality of a state or political subdivision of a state may qualify under section 501(c)(3) if it is organized as a separate entity from the governmental unit that created it and if it otherwise meets the organizational and operational tests of section 501(c)(3). See Rev. Rul. 60-384, 1960-2 C.B. 172. Any such organization that is a school is not a private school and, therefore, is not subject to the provisions of Rev. Proc. 75-50.

Schools that incorrectly answer "Yes" to line 2 will be contacted to furnish the information called for by lines 3 through 10 in order to establish that they meet the requirements for exemption. To prevent delay in the processing of your application, be sure to answer line 2 correctly and complete lines 3 through 10, if applicable.

Section II Medical Research Organizations

1 Name the hospitals with which the organization has a relationship and describe the relationship.

2 Attach a schedule describing the organization's present and proposed (indicate which) medical research activities; show the nature of the activities, and the amount of money that has been or will be spent in carrying them out. (Making grants to other organizations is not direct conduct of medical research.)

3 Attach a statement of assets showing their fair market value and the portion of the assets directly devoted to medical research.

Additional Information

Hospitals

To be entitled to status as a "hospital," an organization must have, as its principal purpose or function, the providing of medical or hospital care or medical education or research. "Medical care" includes the treatment of any physical or mental disability or condition, the cost of which may be taken as a deduction under section 213, whether the treatment is performed on an inpatient or outpatient basis. Thus, a rehabilitation institution, outpatient clinic, or community mental health or drug treatment center may be a hospital if its principal function is providing the above-described services.

On the other hand, a convalescent home or a home for children or the aged is not a hospital. Similarly, an institution whose principal purpose or function is to train handicapped individuals to pursue some vocation is not a hospital. Moreover, a medical education or medical research institution is not a hospital, unless it is also actively engaged in providing medical or hospital care to patients on its premises or in its facilities on an inpatient or outpatient basis.

Cooperative Hospital Service Organizations

Cooperative hospital service organizations (section 501(e)) should not complete Schedule C.

Medical Research Organizations

To qualify as a medical research organization, the principal function of the organization must be the direct, continuous, and active conduct of medical research in conjunction with a hospital that is described in section 501(c)(3), a Federal hospital, or an instrumentality of a governmental unit referred to in section 170(c)(1).

For purposes of section 170(b)(1)(A)(iii) only, the organization must be set up to use the funds it receives in the active conduct of medical research by January 1 of the fifth calendar year after receipt. The arrangement it has with donors to assure use of the funds within the 5-year period must be legally enforceable.

As used here, "medical research" means investigations, experiments, and studies to discover, develop, or verify knowledge relating to the causes, diagnosis, treatment, prevention, or control of human physical or mental diseases and impairments.

For further information, see Regulations section 1.170A-9(c)(2).

Instructions

If the organization claims to be an operating foundation described in section 4942(j)(3) and—

a. Bases its claim to private operating foundation status on normal and regular operations over a period of years; or

b. Is newly created, set up as a private operating foundation, and has at least 1 year's experience; provide the information under the income test and under one of the three supplemental tests (assets, endowment, or support). If the organization does not have at least 1 year's experience, provide the information called for on line 21. If the organization's private operating foundation status depends on its normal and regular operations as described in a above, attach a schedule similar to Schedule E showing the data in tabular form for the 3 years preceding the most recent tax year. (See Regulations section 53.4942(b)-1 for additional information before completing the "Income Test" section of this schedule.) Organizations claiming section 4942(j)(5) status must satisfy the income test and the endowment test.

A "private operating foundation" described in section 4942(j)(3) is a private foundation that spends substantially all of the smaller of its adjusted net income (as defined below) or its minimum investment return directly for the active conduct of the activities constituting the purpose or function for which it is organized and operated. The foundation must satisfy the income test under section 4942(j)(3)(A), as modified by Regulations section 53.4942(b)-1, and one of the following three supplemental tests: (1) the assets test under section 4942(j)(3)(B)(i); (2) the endowment test under section 4942(j)(3)(B)(ii); or (3) the support test under section 4942(j)(3)(B)(iii).

Certain long-term care facilities described in section 4942(j)(5) are treated as private operating foundations for purposes of section 4942 only.

"Adjusted net income" is the excess of gross income determined with the income modifications described below for the tax year over the sum of deductions determined with the deduction modifications described below. Items of gross income from any unrelated trade or business and the deductions directly connected with the unrelated trade or business are taken into account in computing the organization's adjusted net income.

Income Modifications

The following are income modifications (adjustments to gross income):

1. Section 103 (relating to interest on certain governmental obligations) does not apply. Thus, interest that otherwise would have been excluded should be included in gross income.

2. Except as provided in 3 below, capital gains and losses are taken into account only to the extent of the net short-term gain. Long-term gains and losses are disregarded.

3. The gross amount received from the sale or disposition of certain property should be included in gross income to the extent that the acquisition of the property constituted a qualifying distribution under section 4942(g)(1)(B).

4. Repayments of prior qualifying distributions (as defined in section 4942(g)(1)(A)) constitute items of gross income.

5. Any amount set aside under section 4942(g)(2) that is "not necessary for the purposes for which it was set aside" constitutes an item of gross income.

Deduction Modifications

The following are deduction modifications (adjustments to deductions):

1. Expenses for the general operation of the organization according to its charitable purposes (as contrasted with expenses for the production or collection of income and management, conservation, or maintenance of income-producing property) should not be taken as deductions. If only a portion of the property is used for production of income subject to section 4942 and the remainder is used for general charitable purposes, the expenses connected with that property should be divided according to those purposes. Only expenses related to the income-producing portion should be taken as deductions.

2. Charitable contributions, deductible under section 170 or 642(c), should not be taken into account as deductions for adjusted net income.

3. The net operating loss deduction prescribed under section 172 should not be taken into account as a deduction for adjusted net income.

4. The special deductions for corporations (such as the dividends-received deduction) allowed under sections 241 through 249 should not be taken into account as deductions for adjusted net income.

5. Depreciation and depletion should be determined in the same manner as under section 4940(c)(3)(B).

Section 265 (relating to the expenses and interest connected with tax-exempt income) should not be taken into account.

You may find it easier to figure adjusted net income by completing column (c), Part 1, Form 990-PF, according to the instructions for that form.

An organization that has been held to be a private operating foundation will continue to be such an organization only if it meets the income test and either the assets, endowment, or support test in later years. See Regulations section 53.4942(b) for additional information. No additional request for ruling will be necessary or appropriate for an organization to maintain its status as a private operating foundation. However, data related to the above tests must be submitted with the organization's annual information return, Form 990-PF.

APPENDIX C: SUMMARY OF COMMENTS
RECEIVED BY THE JOINT COMMITTEE STAFF
IN CONNECTION WITH ITS STUDY OF DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION RELATING TO TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

In general

The Joint Committee staff received a number of responses to a request for comments on the issues of: (1) confidentiality of returns and return information; and (2) increased disclosure of information with respect to tax-exempt organizations described in Code section 501. The Joint Committee on Taxation Press Release 99-03, released on August 17, 1999, solicited comments from interested parties on these issues and requested comments on particular issues. Regarding the disclosure of information with respect to tax-exempt organizations described in section 501, the press release specifically solicited comments on: (1) whether the public interest would be served by greater disclosure of information with respect to such organizations; and (2) the extent to which the present-law tax-exempt disclosure provisions assure accountability of tax-exempt organizations to the public, the IRS, and other agencies that provide oversight.

The comments relating to increased disclosure of information with respect to tax-exempt organizations can be divided into three categories.²⁹⁶ The first category is comprised of letters from State Attorneys General requesting earlier disclosure of information from the IRS than allowed under present law. The second category of comments relates to the information included on the Form 990 and its uses. The third category relates to the disclosure of closing agreements and written determinations.

State Attorney General requests for information regarding section 501(c)(3) organizations

The State Attorney General or another State official ordinarily is charged with the administration, enforcement and supervision of charities and charitable trusts within that State.²⁹⁷ This person is referred to as a State charity official. Under present-law rules, the IRS is permitted to disclose information to State charity officials determinations with respect to denial or revocations of exemption under section 501(c)(3).²⁹⁸ Treasury regulations provides for disclosure of such information only after a final determination is made by the IRS.²⁹⁹

²⁹⁶ Comments relating generally to confidentiality of returns and return information are summarized in Part Six of Volume I of this study.

²⁹⁷ See the discussion in Part III. B. and Part IV., D., above.

²⁹⁸ Sec. 6104(c).

²⁹⁹ Treas. reg. sec. 301-6104(c)-1(c).

The Attorneys General of the States of New Hampshire, New York, and Texas separately requested that the IRS be permitted to disclose pertinent information from ongoing IRS investigations of section 501(c)(3) organizations rather than waiting until the completion of the IRS investigations. They argued that the delayed disclosure required under present law results in a duplication of effort between the IRS and the State Attorney General in cases of contemporaneous Federal and State investigations. A second argument in favor of earlier disclosure by the IRS was that more timely identification of suspect organizations or practices will allow faster intervention by the State charity official. The present-law delay, the Attorneys General argue, allows misuse of charitable funds to continue longer than need be and may even result in the exhaustion or depletion of the assets of the organization. This delay also allows some organizations to continue to solicit donations which they misrepresent as being tax deductible. For these reasons, the Attorneys General requested a change in the disclosure rules with respect to tax-exempt organizations described in section 501(c)(3) of the Code, to accelerate the sharing of such information by the IRS with the States. The comments of the Section of Taxation of the American Bar Association (the “ABA Tax Section”) also supported earlier disclosure to the State Attorneys General.

Form 990 and its uses

The Evergreen State Society strongly urged more information sharing between the IRS and State and local jurisdictions. The Evergreen State Society believes that greater cooperation will result in improved regulation and supervision of the tax-exempt sector. The ABA Tax Section also encouraged the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate whether the current levels and forms of disclosure may be modified “to assure the desired accountability, especially with respect to the general public.” The ABA Tax Section suggested that consideration be given to the provision of information in addition to or in lieu of present-law information returns. Similarly, a private citizen suggested that steps be taken to improve compliance in the filing of Forms 990 and 990T and to expand the types of information disclosed (e.g., adding the disclosure of detailed information on any government grants received by the organization on its Form 990).

In contrast, the Council on Foundations, the Independent Sector, the American Society of Association Executives, and the National Club Association expressed the view that present-law reporting is sometimes overbroad and is often duplicative, and is unnecessary to the policy goals served by reporting generally. The American Society of Association Executives and the National Club Association highlighted the present-law disclosure of organization salary and benefit information as an example illustrating when the public policy goal of better oversight of tax-exempt organizations is outweighed by the privacy concerns of these employees. The American Society of Association Executives and the National Club Association also cited the negative effect of such disclosure on retaining employees. Some suggestions from these four organizations included streamlining the present-law forms, the addition of a summary section, acceleration of electronic filing of tax-exempt organization returns, and the elimination of reporting on certain information that is not necessary to any relevant public policy purpose.

Disclosure of exempt organization closing agreements and written determinations memoranda

The ABA Tax Section and the law firm of Patton Boggs LLP recommended expanding the disclosure rules applicable to certain tax-exempt organizations. Under present law, disclosure is required for documents relating to the application for tax-exempt status, and annual information returns for tax-exempt organizations. Section 6110 provides that written determinations by the IRS (including private letter rulings and technical advice memoranda) generally are open to public inspection in redacted form. However, section 6110 has been interpreted in IRS regulations to prohibit the disclosure of some written determinations and other documents relating to tax-exempt organizations that are not subject to disclosure under section 6104. The ABA Tax Section and Patton Boggs LLP argued that public disclosure of these additional documents would improve taxpayer and practitioner understanding of the IRS' interpretation and underlying rationale of important issues relating to such organizations.³⁰⁰

The law firms of Gardner, Carton and Douglas and McDermott, Will and Emory argued against public disclosure rules applicable to tax-exempt organizations with respect to closing agreements. These firms asserted that mandatory public disclosure of these additional documents would reduce the willingness of tax-exempt organizations to settle audits. Further, they argued that such organizations may rather delay any resolution of these tax issues until such time as they maybe uncovered in an IRS audit. Gardner, Carton and Douglas and McDermott, Will and Emory concluded that expanding mandatory disclosure to closing agreements rather than improving tax administration and compliance by tax-exempt organizations, would seriously impair the ability of the IRS to conclude audits or resolve other issues efficiently and expeditiously.

³⁰⁰ The ABA Tax Section did not take a position with respect to closing agreements, stating that there were arguments both for and against disclosure.
